'ERE 'ERE, what's all this about then? George, the Harlequin Great Dane pup belonging to Victoria Ald. Mike Young, is accustomed to such curious reactions when he takes his owner for a morning constitutional down Rockland. But there's no real mystery in that weird-looking antenna of his. To make sure his docked ears stand up properly until the cartilage secures, they have to be bound up for a few days at a time. George, four and a half months old and a boisterous 70 pounds, tries to shake off the supports but is getting used to them, according to his owner.

Escapes Prompt Sheriff Review

The B.C. Sheriff service will undergo a total re-examination as a result of incidents in Nanaimo and Vancouver Thursday and Friday which ended in three deputy sheriffs being stabbed and beaten by their prisoner escorts.

Geoffrey Mortimer, head of the service, told the Times he will begin Monday to meet with deputy sheriffs in Vancouver and elsewhere "to listen to what they have to say."

The sheriffs are upset over a lack of protection in defending themselves while escorting prisoners.

However, Mortimer said he did not feel arming the sheriffs with guns was the answer.

Commenting in the stabbing of two sheriffs in Nanaimo Thursday by three prisoners he said if the guards had been armed "I think one of them would be dead today."

He also felt the prisoners in Vancouver would not have been able to make their desperate escape bid Friday if an armed police officer had not been there. The prisoners attacked the officer in an elevator, slashed his throat with a razor and wrestled his revolver from his holster. A deputy sheriff accompanying them received cuts to his hand in the scuffle but was otherwise unharmed.

Deputy attorney-general David Vickers has ordered a thorough reveiw of events surrounding the two attacks which he described as "vicious and unprovoked."

"We shouldn't jump to any conclusions about arming the sheriffs," Mortimer said. "We have to examine all areas especially our procedures searching prisoners, the security measures we are taking, and the restraining devices we are using."

He found it difficult to understand how prisoners were able to secrete weapons on them and said, "we are going to have to spend more time and care searching the people we escort."

He noted since the sheriffs began taking over court security and escort duties in September "everything had gone so well."

"We have escorted on the average 1,000 prisoners a month without problem.

"But perhaps we have been too anxious to help police and have rushed in to take over some escorts we shouldn't have."

He said training of sheriffs will have to be stepped up to stress the need for caution in handling prisoners, particularly those convicted of violent crimes.

Mortimer said some thought would be given also to using different kinds of restraining devices such as belly chains which link handcuffs to a chain worn like a belt around the waist. The device is in use in some parts of the U.S.

U.K. Homes Raided In IRA Crackdown

Times News Services

LONDON — Detectives raided north London homes today and arrested 10 suspected bombers in a crackdown on the newly outlawed Irish Republican Army. In Northern Ireland bombs exploded in two taverns injuring more than 60 persons Friday night.

The arrests were the first made under Britain's new anti-terrorist law which went into effect at midnight and gave police special search and seizure powers.

Police said the suspects were picked up for questioning in connection with bomb blasts in Guildford and Woolwich pubs that killed seven Britons and wounded 86 others in October and early November.

A police spokesman said Scotland Yard has asked the home office for permission to arrest and deport several known IRA activists under the new law.

Within hours after parliament approved legislation Friday banning the IRA and granting extra powers for use against it, Scotland Yard distributed a list of "more than 20" suspects they want to question and possibly order out of the country.

Police renewed their warning against a possible new blitz of IRA reprisal bombings and told people to avoid sites of explosions in case booby-traps had been laid.

At midnight special security units—most of their members in plain clothes—took over passenger surveillence at airports and seaports, taking special care with travellers coming from and leaving for the Irish republic.

Under the new laws, police and immigration officials have the power to request persons arriving from the Irish republic for proof of their identity and the reason for their journey, and to detain suspects on the spot or turn them back.

Extra electronic equipment was installed at the immigration section of London airport and authorities spent Friday studying procedures there so as to better spot IRA suspects.

But despite the flurry of police activity after Parliament outlawed the IRA Friday, Scotland Yard spokesmen said it may still be weeks before the anti-IRA drive can get into full swing in England and Wales.

Police officials warned that caution will have to be taken not to harass or antagonize the more than one million Irish residents in England and Wales.

Central Bank Moves To Boost Economy

OTTAWA (CP) — Federal monetary authorities moved cautiously Friday to stimulate the economy but warned again that they are not relaxing efforts to contain inflation.

The Bank of Canada eased lending restrictions but Gerald Boney, the bank's governor, said they will take action to substantially offset the change.

The bank announcement was to reduce to seven per cent from eight the amount of secondary reserves which chartered banks must keep to back up deposits. Primary reserves are cash and secondary reserves are short-term loans, most of which can be converted to cash within 90 days. Current cash reserve requirements are between 5¾ and six per cent.

The bank official said that a lowering of the secondary reserve ratio would 'allow about $550 million of the reserves which the banks now hold ... to become available as some of their investment money."

He emphasized, however, this would not necessarily result in larger amounts of loan money "becoming available since the banks can choose to invest it where they want.

The statement from the central bank said a major factor in the decision was the success of the recent Canada savings bond campaign. The government had net sales of slightly more than $4 billion, a record sales total.

Although reduction in secondary reserve requirements would free about $500 million for chartered banks to make long-term loans, Bouey said, the central bank will use its extra cash to pay off government securities, thus taking money out of the banking system and in large part offsetting the easier loan policy.

Bouey said the central bank's main concern is to not provoke higher inflation by putting too much money into circulation.

Barrett Left Chinese Smiling

By LINDA HUGHES
Times Staff

HONG KONG — Premier Dave Barrett bade farewell to his hosts Friday and made a quiet, undramatic exit from China across an old railway bridge that links the Communist nation with Hong Kong.

The good-bye at Canton railway station marked the end of 11 hard days of work for the delegation's six Chinese interpreters but the young hosts seemed genuinely sorry to say farewell to the expansive socialist premier and his unconventional troupe of companions.

At the end, and throughout the trip, Barrett was his humble best, speaking a great deal about friendship and the warmth and kindness of the Chinese people.

He seldom engaged in political debate with his hosts, never criticized what he saw and rarely made comparisons with Canada. He played the role of enthusiastic observer and seemed to go over well with the Chinese.

Always the joker, his back-slapping, jovial manner sometimes met with stony silence but more often pleased his hosts who were eager to talk friendship and goodwill and to avoid delicate political discussions.

His enthusiastic mood set the tone for the whole delegation and any cynics in the group tended to keep their thoughts to themselves or save them for quiet comment later.

Barrett pulled many of his old electioneering tricks, rolling up his sleeves and trying to pitch in with the workers and performing his "kitchen trip" everywhere the delegation ate. The Chinese cooks were always bewildered but pleased at the attention they received from their effusive guest who would sneak into the kitchen, shake their hands, tell them he once worked in a kitchen and assured them that cooks are the unsung heroes of the world.

Despite his light-hearted approach, however, Barrett made a visible effort to be diplomatic at all times and avoid the faux pas so many people expected of him.

But the premier was only one among a strange mixture of 14 people brought together to form the B.C. delegation.

The majority of the group were socialists—Barrett, Health Minister Dennis Cocke, Attorney-General Alex Macdonald, Barrett's assistant Harvey Beech and Vancouver-Centre NDP MLA Emery Barnes.

But two staunch free enterprisers — Vancouver businessman Quan Wong and MacMillan Bloedel president Denis Timmis—balanced off the group along with a working man's representative, In-

Truce Duties Extended

Times News Services

UNITED NATIONS — The Security Council unanimously gave a six-month extension to the Golan Heights truce force Friday night, but heard a warning from Secretary General Kurt Waldheim that if the reprieve is not used for progress toward a peace settlement, "the dangers of a new military confrontation will steadily increase."

The 1,224-man force that has separated the Israeli and Syrian armies since the disengagement agreement in May was authorized to continue through next May 31. China and Iraq, as usual, did not participate in the 13 to 0 vote.

Meanwhile in the Middle East, Israeli planes today raided the Lebanese border village of Kafra and other targets inland from the coastal city of Tyre, sources in the area said.

Charlottes Have Oil, Firm Claims

PRINCE RUPERT (CP) — Skaist Mining Ltd., a small Vancouver-based firm, claims to have discovered a substantial amount of shale oil on the Queen Charlotte Islands, according to the Prince Rupert News.

The News quotes Roy Carlson, spokesman for Skaist, as saying the deposits could contain as much as five to 10 billion barrels of oil. The company owns more than 207 claims covering some 10,000 acres on Graham Island, northernmost of the Queen Charlotte chain.

Carlson said six months of testing and drilling are planned to determine the size of the deposit.

The company has entered preliminary negotiations with the Haida Indian Band at Masset, reportedly offering the Haidas five per cent of net profits and a directorship of the firm in return for environmental advice, the News says.

The Vancouver Stock Exchange reported Friday that 481,500 shares of Skaist were traded this week, making it one of the most active mining stocks. It closed at 28 cents after ranging as high as 30 cents and as low as 17 cents, up six cents from last week's close.

Discipline Dispute Shuts Teens' Home

By LIZ HUGHES
Times Staff

A strict and structured group home for teenagers in Victoria West closes today after only nine months of operation, its financing cut off by the provincial department of human resources.

The reason for the cutoff is a controversial issue which has lately been raising eyebrows and ire in the fields of education, child psychology and human rights.

The issue is discipline — when to use it, how much to use it or whether to use it at all.

The group home in Vic West, housed in a stately but aging wooden home at 943 Fullerton, was a bastion of discipline.

The home's supervisor, Mark Langley, a quiet young man with a degree in psychology and four years' experience in the child care field, says the home operates on equal measures of love, teaching and discipline.

But the discipline has become a bitter pill for the department of human resources and others in the child care field.

One incident especially, during which workers in the home tied up and sat on a 13-year-old boy who was throwing a tantrum, caused tremors in the department and probably contributed to the financial cutoff.

In a written report on the incident, Langley describes the boy as "epileptic, having behavioral and learning problems since kindergarten."

He had proved unmanageable both in his own home and in a foster home, Langley says.

"When one of the workers at the group home first said "no" to something the boy wanted to do "he got quite wild-eyed and threatening," the report says.

The worker did not back down from his stand, and the boy continued with his tantrum which included "threatening staff with a skate and a knife, spitting, banging walls, crying, wailing, throwing various articles, running out on the roof and shouting obscenities."

"For everyone's protection ... we laid him on the bed and sat on him. He continued to bang around so we warned him that we would tie him up if he continued. He laughed at us and continued. We tied him up," the report says.

After about 10 minutes, the boy's struggling stopped, and the workers untied him.

About a week after the first incident, the situation was repeated and again the workers held him down. "He did not settle down so we went to get the rope. He saw the rope and settled down."

Langley says the next time the boy's plans were thwarted, the workers talked to him for five hours, with no physical restraints.

Eventually the boy came to a point where if he was told he could not do something he would sulk, but the tantrums had disappeared.

Train-Car Collision Kills Three

CHILLIWACK (CP)—Three people died about five miles east of here today when two cars collided with a Canadian National Railways coal train.

Carolus Gouwenberg, 18, and his sister Janet Maria, 20, of Agassiz, and Robert Gerber, 23, of Kelowna, were killed.

A police spokesman said the cars struck the 46th car of the 88-car train derailing 11 coal cars.

Munro in SIU Cheque Row

TORONTO (CP) — The Star says Labor Minister John Munro has told it that the Seafarers' International Union sent him a cheque for $500 toward his campaign costs in the July general election but that he returned the cheque.

The newspaper says in a copyright story from Ottawa that Munro's statement was made after it was learned that the RCMP has begun investigating the union.

It quotes Munro as saying he expects the investigation to clear him.

In the Ontario legislature last week, Morton Shulman, New Democratic Party member for Toronto-High Park, charged the SIU with violence; said it has made contributions to the Liberal party, and alleged the federal government has refused to investigate complaints of violence by the union.

The Star says it has learned that tapes of a legally-authorized Metropolitan Toronto police intelligence unit wiretap revealed a conversation between the union and Munro about campaign contributions.

"The sources described the conversation as "a bombshell," the newspaper adds.

"Munro told The Star that such a conversation took place but subsequently he decided to return the SIU cheque to the union."

Dr. Shulman said Friday night he will reveal the contents of the taped conversation in the legislature Tuesday.

The Star says the tape reveals a conversation between Munro and SIU President Roman Gralewicz in which they discussed a union contributio to the minister's campaign in Hamilton East.

A Toronto police official is quoted as saying the wiretap report had been leaked to Shulman but he had no idea how the MPP obtained it.

Following Shulman's SIU violence allegations in the legislature, Ontario provincial police revealed Friday that charges have been laid against two of the union's Ontario officials. Roy Willis, headquarters representative for the province, has been charged with possessing offensive weapons and pointing a firearm, and Hedley Harnum, Toronto port agent, with possessing an offensive weapon.

Stoke City Heads First Div.

LONDON (Reuter) — Stoke City moved to the top of the English League First Division soccer race for the first time this season with a 1-0 win at home today over Leicester City.

A goal by Dennis Smith four minutes from the end of a tense match put Stoke in first with 25 points.

Manchester City led the table before today's matches and looked set to equal Stoke's 25 points until the 74th minute of a game at Newcastle.

Then Malcolm Macdonald headed the winner in Newcastle's 2-1 triumph to wipe out a Manchester goal by England striker Rodney Marsh in the first half.

Man, 30, Remanded In Hijack

SASKATOON — A 30-year-old resident of the Winnipeg YMCA, Naim Djemal, appeared in Magistrate's Court here today on a charge of hijacking an aircraft and was remanded until Tuesday.

Djemal was arrested Friday as he stepped from a Boeing 737, ending what CP Air described as the first hijacking in its history.

Passengers aboard the flight that started in Montreal bound for Vancouver said the trouble started while the stewardesses were serving lunch.

The stewardess screamed.

The man demanded to go to Cyprus but the captain said there wasn't enough fuel. He said the plane would have to land in Saskatoon first for refueling.

The plane landed, rolled towards the tarmac in front of the terminal and the captain ordered the rear door opened.

Then, reported RCMP Inspector Don Heaton, the hijacker looked at the captain "and said, in effect, 'I surrender'."

Cross-Border Kidnap Ends With 3 Arrests

EDMUNDSTON, N.B. (CP) — An Acton, Mass., man kidnapped by three men who forced him to cross the border into Canada has been found unharmed and three men have been arrested, Edmunston RCMP reported this morning.

"I figured that they would kill me eventually," Gaylen McLaughlin said in an interview today.

The 62-year-old Acton, Mass., executive described a nightmare that began for him Thursday night when three hitch-hikers commandeered his car in New Hampshire and forced him at gunpoint to accompany them into Canada.

The trip, which included the running of a border crossing at Houlton, Me., to Woodstock, N.B., and an arrest of a man in the car for not having a licence, ended this morning when police arrested two more men at Edmundston.

McLaughlin was exhausted but unharmed. "It hit me a little while ago and I broke down," he said.

The men had kept him a passenger in his own car and had hinted at the beginning of the trip what would happen if he resisted.

"They told me a guy looked awful funny after he'd been hit with bullet through his forehead and out the back of his head."

McLaughlin, the head of the McLaughlin Machine Tool Co. of Acton, a Boston-area community, said the trouble began when he stopped to pick up three young men hitch-hiking in New Hampshire. He said he was on his way to visit a friend in Lincoln, Me.

He became suspicious shortly afterward because "they were pretty nosy."

He said one of them pulled out a pistol and said they were going to Canada. One took over the wheel. The men did not mention ransom. "They were just trying to get away from something — I don't know what."

That was Thursday morning. About 11:15 p.m. Thursday, the car crossed the border without stopping on the Canadian side.

Customs and immigration officials were apparently caught unawares.

Canadian customs officers said Friday they could not tell how many persons were in a car which did not stop for a customs check.

A siren on the customs building was turned on and the car pulled over a few hundreds past the checkpoint, then started off again.

About 4:30 a.m. Friday a car containing four persons was stopped for speeding in Grand Falls, N.B., about 75 miles north of the Houlton-Woodstock border crossing.

Its driver, a 25-year-old man from Haverhill, Mass., was arrested. The other persons and the car were not held. Asked how he felt when help was so near, McLaughlin said:

"Let's not discuss that."

Escapee Partner in Kidnap

One of four prisoners who escaped from the Vancouver city jail Friday morning was serving time for a recent major Victoria crime.

Gordon Andrews, 21, had been sentenced to seven years on Nov. 16 for his part in the kidnapping of two RCMP officers the previous day.

Andrews was captured minutes after the escape, along with Larry Marshall and Robert Hume. The fourth prisoner, Vincent Fitzgerald, is still at large.

Andrews and Hume were set to appear in court for sentencing on seven counts of armed robbery in Vancouver which had netted the pair more than $30,000.

The four men, shackled and handcuffed, attacked a Vancouver city police officer in an elevator taking them to the court. They slashed the officer across throat with a razor and stole his gun. A deputy sheriff accompanying them received a cut in the hand in the scuffle.

The four then stopped the elevator and sent it back down to the third floor where they ordered another deputy sheriff to remove their chains and handcuffs.

They fled outside, shot a citizen who refused to give them his car, commandeered another vehicle and tore off at high speed only to be stopped minutes later by pursing police.

In a similar case on Vancouver Island three convicts who had escaped from their guards at Cassidy airport Thursday appeared in Nanaimo provincial court to face charges of attempted murder.

Ricky Dale Beeman, 23, Claire Wilson, 19, and Robert Moyse, 24, were remanded to Dec. 6 without plea to seek legal counsel.

The three are jointly charged with the attempted murder of deputy sheriff Gilbert Perry, 57, farmer Ben Dixon, 66, both of Nanaimo, and RCMP Const. Paul Cloutier of Duncan.

Perry was stabbed and savagely beaten after three prisoners he and another deputy sheriff were escorting jumped them.

The crown alleges the trio attacked an elderly couple, Ben and Frances Dixon, at the couple's farm on Spruceton Road, four hours after the escape. Dixon was beaten over the head and knocked out.

The three men are also charged with shooting at Const. Cloutier during a high speed chase through Nanaimo that evening.

The crown has laid three other charges against the prisoners: assault causing bodily harm in the attack on the other sheriff at the airport, Jerry Ockey, 26; forcible seizure of Frances Dixon, and escaping lawful custody.

You deserve a retirement savings plan.
You could use a tax deduction.

Get what you deserve the easy way.

Here it is. A brand new idea from Royal Trust that makes a tax-deductible retirement savings plan affordable by everyone eligible. It works the same way as a savings account. You put away money for your future and get a tax deduction at the same time.

With Royal Trust's Guaranteed Savings Account R.S.P., you put away as much as you want, when you want. Just like a savings account. And that way you don't even notice it.

Think of it. Now you have a choice of making a single large contribution to your retirement savings plan or you can contribute small amounts over the course of the year and achieve the same result. And we'll go one step further: we'll lend you the money.

Highlights of the Plan:

- Minimum initial contribution: $25.00.
- No fees at any time.
- Contributions of any amount within the allowable limits may be made at any time.
- Transfers, terminations, annuity purchases may be made at any time.
- All contributions are guaranteed by Royal Trust.
- Interest rate is ¼ of 1% higher than the going Royal Trust Savings Account rate in effect on the first day of each calendar quarter.
- Interest is calculated on the minimum monthly balance and credited quarterly.
- Statements are submitted quarterly.
- Income tax receipts are issued three times yearly — in January, February and March.
- Transfers from other R.S.P.'s, pension refunds, retirement allowances and other qualified monies are acceptable.

We think we've come up with a simple, flexible guaranteed plan, easy for you to understand and participate in. Call us or see us for more information or to clear up any questions.

Decide what you want. We can help you.

Hitchcock Image Unfair to Gulls

STRAY FEATHERS
harold hosford

Once upon a time there was a gull named Jonathan. According to legend, he was a fine upstanding fellow—bit of a rebel maybe—but by all accounts, the epitome of gullery, and a best-seller at that.

Then there was another gull, a killer, that murdered and ate a kitten in Vancouver; a polluter, that soiled a Campbell River housewife's freshly-done wash; a raucous noisemaker that destroyed the daytime sleep of a Nanaimo shift worker; and a boisterous bully that knocked a little old lady off her feet in a Victoria park.

And there's that other gull, the one that glistens in the sun, its immaculate whiteness sharp against the blue of a summer sky as it follows the ferries and brings joy to the heart of every traveller that notices it.

As a a matter of fact, all these gulls—or examples of gulls as men see them—could not only be the same kind of gull but the same individual, depending on time, place and the mood of the person involved.

In short, gulls are first what they are and second what men make them. And what men make them is not always what they are.

This forgettable bit of philosophical profundity stems from the various reactions I have heard to the recent news that our gulls are not only on the increase but that, by inference at least, they have somehow embarked on a sinister new form of behavior towards man and his fellow travellers.

Shades of Hitchcock and The Birds!

While it is true that our Glaucous-winged Gulls have shown a dramatic increase in their numbers in the last decade, any inference that, like Hitchcock's birds, they are about to turn on the hand that feeds them is to say the least, deceptive.

And while their behavior too, is changing, these changes manifest themselves more in how gulls get along with one another rather than in their relations with men: Like human beings who feel their freedom limited by an ever-increasing population, and the over-crowding that goes with it, the gulls are becoming testy, short-tempered, more competitive and ready to take offence at any real or imagined threat from another gull.

But, you may say, what about the Vancouver kitten, or the reports of biologists left bleeding from vicious attacks by gulls on their nesting islands, or our little old lady's experience in Beacon Hill Park.

All part of the pattern, I say, and each event in itself is no cause for alarm because in every case the human involvement in the incident was only coincidental.

First, a gull is the complete opportunist. Had the Vancouver kitten been a rat, or a mouse, hardly a head would have turned. But a kitten, a pet; well that's a bit much. The fact is that a stray kitten is, and always has been, fair game for a large gull's predatory inclinations.

As for the biologist, he just felt the pinch of overcrowding right on the gull's home territory because it is there that the real behavior changes become obviously apparent.

From my experience, gulls generally become apprehensive, as they should, at any intrusion onto their nesting islands but seldom do they do more than mill around in the air calling. Occasionally, one will sweep down in a long, shallow dive, to distract you from behind, but the attack never involves physical contact.

Now they're pressing home the attacks with bloody results. But, once again, this is not behavior directed towards humans as such, but toward any threat to the nests. And the attacks are now apparently more forceful than they once were because of the stresses of overcrowding.

And, as for our little old lady in the park, she was the innocent victim of many birds vying for a handout. She simply got lost in the rush.

So, if you must worry about the impending disasters we are told await us, put attack by gulls well down the list somewhere behind collision with the moon, Martian invasion and the return of the Ice Age.

DOUBT ABOUT NIXON

Times News Services

WASHINGTON — There is considerable doubt over whether Richard Nixon will ever give testimony for the Watergate cover-up trial.

A team of medical specialists reported to Judge John J. Sirica in U.S. District Court Friday that the former president was not well enough to testify in Washington before Feb. 16, in a California courtroom until Feb. 2, or to make a deposition at his home before Jan. 6.

Nixon was on the critical list of a California hospital last month because of complications arising from surgery for phlebitis, a vein disorder.

Former White House chief of staff H. R. Haldeman denied any intention to obstruct justice in the cover-up as he testified in his own defence Friday. He is expected to finish by midweek.

That leaves only the defences of John Ehrlichman, once Nixon's No. 2 aide, and former assistant attorney general Robert Mardian and Kenneth Parkinson, who were lawyers for the re-election committee. Some lawyers hope all trial matters including final arguments and instructions to the jury can be completed before Christmas.

Ehrlichman, the only defendant to subpoena Nixon, is believed to be preparing a long list of witnesses.

Ehrlichman's principal lawyer, William Frates, said: "We've said Nixon's testimony is essential and indispensable and I reiterate that."

Lawyers familiar with the case said that if testimony ends before Nixon is well enough to provide testimony under oath at his San Clemente, Calif., estate, Sirica might keep the jurors sequestered at a downtown Washington hotel where they have stayed since the trial began 10 weeks ago.

One slim possibility, the lawyers said, is that the judge might simply send the jurors home for the holidays and call them back to hear a deposition from Nixon read to them before lawyers for the defence and prosecution making closing statements.

Bennett Says Socreds Must Change Image

BENNETT

VANCOUVER (CP) — The British Columbia Social Credit Party's largest-ever policy convention opened Friday with Leader Bill Bennett offering what he called a party newly-recommitted to people.

In his keynote address to the two-day convention, Bennett told about 2,000 delegates that the party "must shake off its image of being a business party and a cash register party."

"This party must re-establish itself as being committed to people," the opposition leader said.

Delegates were told that Social Credit was making a commitment to provide shelter for the people of B.C., equality in education and guaranteed employment.

Bennett said the party must work toward a policy of income stability through an income maintenance insurance program. He said such a program would not be "subject to political whim" and would guarantee to fight the ravages of inflation.

The province's New Democratic government came in for a round of strong criticism from the opposition leader. Government mismanagement of funds was his main point of attack.

Bennett said that when Premier Dave Barrett took over power from Social Credit two years ago, "he inherited a full treasury and a healthy economy — two things I think he wishes he had back."

As an example of NDP incompetence, he cited B.C. Hydro's borrowing of $100 million in the United States. Bennett said misallocation of funds for the government-owned utility forced the corporation to borrow money in the U.S. at an interest rate of 10¼ per cent.

The province is locked into a non-negotiable loan that will see $10.2 million a year drained from its coffers until 1999 in interest payments alone, the opposition leader said.

And with interest rates dropping, he added, B.C. will be the only place in the world paying this interest in 25 years.

Bennett also criticized the provincial government for its monopoly car insurance scheme, saying that no one is paying less under Autoplan than under private insurance plans.

Grace McCarthy, president of the Social Credit League, told delegates here there has been a great growth in membership in the last two years, but did not say how many members the party has. However, she did say that a province-wide door-to-door canvassing program had signed up 7,252 new members in more than two months.

Vancouver Mayor Art Phillips, in his official greeting to the convention, said he hoped delegates would look into the great imbalance in resources that exists between provincial and municipal governments. He suggested the per capita grant be geared to the needs and revenues of municipalities, instead of being allocated on an arbitrary basis.

Former premier W. A. C. Bennett was in the audience to hear his son but he kept a low profile and left soon after the speech was finished.

Chinese Ex-Leader Crushed

TOKYO (AP) — Chen Po-ta, once Chairman Mao's political secretary and radical leader of the 1966-69 cultural revolution, is alive but broken politically and perhaps physically, a Chinese journal says.

Chen, 70, was the leading Communist theorist and No. 4 in the party up to 1970 when he disappeared from the public scene.

The journal, Study and Criticism, says in its fall issue that he was the man behind the late defence minister Lin Piao's ambition to become chief of state.

Chen has been identified vaguely as closely associated with Lin's reported plot against Mao Tse-tung and Premier Chou En-lai.

"Lin Piao, who likened himself to the 'heavenly horse galloping through the skies,' died in a crash at Undur Khan in Mongolia,' the journal said. "Chen Po-ta has likewise fallen from the counter-revolutionary peak and has become a dog with a broken spine."

Though he had worked closely with Mao's wife, the ultra-leftist Chiang Ching, during the cultural revolution, Chen was portrayed in the journal as a defender of imperialism.

The journal accuses Chen of encouraging Lin to believe he was a genius in the Confucian mold, thus prodding him into rebellion against Mao.

U.S. Senator Hits Canadian Oil 'Gouge'

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn. (AP) — Prime Minister Trudeau is gouging American consumers with a tax of more than $5 a barrel on Canadian oil sold to the United States, Senator Bill Brock (Rep. — Tenn.) said Friday.

"I don't want to get into a trade war with Canada," Brock told a news conference, "but I think this country should be more diligent in protecting itself."

He said midwestern states depend almost exclusively on Canadian oil and are having to pay a discriminatory tax for it.

"It's an absolute fraud," Brock said. "It appears that our two nations are building the foundation of a wall between us at a time when we should be seeking joint solutions to mutual problems.

"This is not a major stumbling block to the great relations that we have known, nor should it be. However, the American consumer is being 'had' by this discriminatory tax."

Brock said there are a number of ways the U.S. can retaliate, and suggested that Congress apply pressure on a pipeline from Western Canada to that nation's eastern provinces that runs through the northeastern United States.

"The northeastern provinces rely on that pipeline for roughly 400,000 barrels of oil a day," he said. "If they (the Canadians) put the upper midwest of this country out of business, then the Congress would be under great pressure to compensate."

A Cup of Milk for Life

The Unitarian Service Committee usually mixes one ounce of powdered milk to six ounces of water. In Bangladesh the formula is often one ounce of milk to eight or 10 ounces of water because children's stomachs are not accustomed to protein food. In Canada, where we feed eight pounds of grain to a steer in order to make one pound of beef protein starvation, is practically unknown. USC executive director Dr. Lotta Hitschmanova writes of "ghost-like figures in rags . . . moving about in the half-darkness" and thin children "often completely covered with impetigo."

Death from starvation will kill millions of people on this planet in 1974. Mjllions, not thousands or hundreds. During a period of world-wide inflation, coupled with food shortages and droughts, it is the people on the dusty plains of the third world who succumb first. With little or no technology to combat natural disasters, one aberration can upset the food chain disastrously. At present, a host of factors have combined to make hunger and starvation a reality for one third of the people on this planet.

One dollar provides 25 cups of milk. One dollar can prolong life 25 times. It provides hope, initiative and will to people, human beings, who otherwise will probably die. How many potentially creative children who might add unique contributions to man's knowledge will be snuffed out because of man's indifference? In Victoria, where food is for the taking on nearby beaches, we can help save lives. Dr. Hitschmanova is hoping to see the people of Victoria donate $22,785 this year — enough to pay for a freight car load of powdered milk. If one Victorian in 10 contributes $1, thousands of children in Bangladesh may live to see better days. That means skipping a couple of desserts in a restaurant. It's not much of a sacrifice to save lives.

Contributions to the non-denominational, non-profit Unitarian Service Committee can be mailed to P. O. Box 300, Victoria or any branch of the Bank of Nova Scotia.

What's Going On at UN?

The United Nations, founded 29 years ago to promote world peace and maintain international security, is an incredibly varied collection of nations representing a multi-hued spectrum of political philosophies and methods of government as different from one another as Afghanistan and Zambia.

Its deliberations often seem puzzling to the un-initiated outsider, who may wonder what the UN actually does besides provide a splendid forum for talk, talk and more talk. Like most committees — and the UN is the committee to end them all — its work sometimes appears to have been pushed and pulled out of all recognizable shape by countless compromises. But the UN is in the business of compromise, and only the purist would object to a compromise that saves lives or stops a war.

However, recent events at the UN provide evidence that the notion of international politics as the art of the possible has all but disappeared from the UN general assembly. Strange things have been happening at UN headquarters along the East River in New York city.

A majority of nations voted to expel the republic of South Africa because of the government's repugnant racial policies by which four million whites hold down three times as many black citizens. One need be no supporter of apartheid to suggest then that the third world nations who formed the majority of those voting for expulsion might look at South Africa's black-run neighbor state of Burundi, where the government conducted a well-documented slaughter of hundreds of thousands of rival tribesmen.

Then the terrorist group Palestine Liberation Organization was accorded official observer status and its leader, Yasser Arafat, accorded a hero's welcome, while dozens of national delegations walked out of Israel's reply and broke precedent to vote to limit sharply any further Israeli speeches.

And this week, the general assembly only narrowly defeated a move to recognize Prince Norodom Sihanouk's Peking-based government-in-exile as the official representative of Cambodia, rather than aging dictator Lon Nol, whose forces nominally occupy the country.

This last action is the most disturbing. International relations tend to pragmatism. Nations recognize each other on the basis of power, who is in control within its boundaries? Such recognition doesn't imply wholehearted support for its domestic policies — Canada has diplomatic relations with Cuba, China and the Soviet Union on the left hand, and Chile, Spain and Brazil on the right hand. It's the only workable basis for international trade and diplomacy.

Increasingly, the future of the UN is questioned. Serious observers make comparisons with the League of Nations which dithered itself into impotence in the 1930s. Founding members like Great Britain talk of pulling out if matters continue in the same way. While it is premature to write the UN's obituary, the signs of creeping paralysis are there now.

Reading the daily litany of horrors we wreak upon one another an editor, like anybody else, is alternately angry, sad, and on too few occasions these days, hopeful. Sometimes I want to roar into print with what is referred to around here as a "mau-mau" — a tough editorial or column slamming somebody or something. All too often a situation is neither black nor white. It is usually gray, because every modern issue has as many facets as a diamond, and each and everyone of them appears brilliant to its own partisans. So we try to be thoughtful, restrained, and perhaps a little too formal in our editorials.

If one of us has a particular view that needs developing we write a column. But one page of comment and opinion can only touch the high points or low points, as is often the case. The format also leaves us at arms length from our readers. In order to diminish the gap between grimaces and grins — and with any luck there will be both — I would like to use this space once in a while to praise, parry, cut and thrust. It won't necessarily hit the high, low or middle of the week's news. It will just be one opinion and I hope you will react enough to write us yours.

Victoria's Chamber of Commerce emerged from its pompous cloak of Manchester Liberalism long enough this week to suggest that free enterprise is a worthy subject for school children. At the same time the chamber is urging the government to take over the Seattle Victoria ferry run when the CPR packs it in. It sounds like an off key version of the two-faced blues. And of course we could always explain the democratic system to school children by telling them how the chamber wants a non-voting, non-elected seat on the Capital Regional Board. Perhaps the men should talk to their junior partner, the Jaycees, and see if there are any vacancies on the beauty contest board.

Right about now the chamber's nemesis should be resting in Hawaii after a grueling 11-day tour of the Celestial Kingdom. Premier Barrett never promised us a new log market. But if the junket didn't sell any logs it should at least broaden the premier's horizons as much as Europe's pubs did. Funny thing though, the Chinese look on Barrett as a bourgeois reformer; here at home he's a dangerous socialist to the Socreds.

And speaking of Her Majesty's loyal opposition, they have just about wrapped up their ritual war dance at Vancouver's Hyatt Regency. Somehow all those fellows in their tight suits, weaving their way around the Regency's rich facade don't look like the serious alternative they pretend to be. Memories last a long time and they have only been in opposition a short time.

Nor should we forget Dr. Scott Wallace, the man from la Mancha who lost his Sancho Panza to the guys in the tight suits. As the Socreds plot in their $35 rooms a lonely crowd of Conservatives is up in Kamloops braving cold winds from the surrounding hills and plotting the impossible dream. Everyone in the legislature can afford to like the fiesty Oak Bay MLA because there is only one of him. But his integrity and honesty is refreshing in a place where cynicism is the order of the day.

Let's see, the Greater Victoria Art Gallery received $35,574 in municipal grants this year; $20,000 from the B.C. cultural fund; $4,000 from the school board, not to mention $600,000 over the past two years from the National Museums Corporation for building expansion. Now the gallery director, who was appointed a little more than one year ago, has resigned and the gallery board offers no explanations. Victoria's cultural doyens prefer a private game. Aghast about anything smacking of bad publicity, they carry on their machinations far from the madding crowd. The trouble is the madding crowd foots the bill in most cases and it deserves a few facts for its investment.

Robert Lemieux, the angry young lawyer who defended Pierre Lapointe's murderers, is pumping gas in the Gaspe community of Sept Iles, a sad ending to a tragic chapter of Canadian history. In that emotional time following the War Measures Act, Lemieux was sentenced to 30 months, later reduced to six months, for contempt of court. Canadian law says everybody has the right to a defence yet one gets the feeling that Lemieux's politics had much to do with his being banished and broken. No prison camps exist in the true north strong and free; we just make it impossible for people to practise their chosen profession. Witness John Young of Campbell River fame. The losers of October, 1970, have vanished from the stage but the government still has the War Measures Act on the books, ready for instant action in the middle of the night without recourse to Parliament.

And praise for Saanich Ald. Mel Couvelier who is conducting his own war for modern library services in Saanich. Some of his Victoria colleagues seem to think libraries are fine for books but not people. They should tour the Edmonton library, to mention only one, and view all the changes that have happened over there in Canada.

MAURICE WESTERN

Conflicts Concern Commons

OTTAWA — The question of potential conflict of interest involving politicians and persons in the public service has suddenly emerged as one of the major concerns of the house of commons. This is a rather impressive change because past Canadian parliaments showed notable indifference to a subject debated with much more apparent concern in other countries such as Britain.

It is true, of course, the opposition politicians have normally been alert to exploit occasional situations involving cabinet ministers. The recent experience of Health Minister Marc Lalonde, though distressing, was by no means unique. But parliament's present interest goes very much deeper and obviously constitutes a rather belated recognition of the important changes which have occurred in the relations between government and business in this country.

A good deal of the present concern, however, arises from the fact that there is a two-way flow. Business, for its own reasons, also recruits from government. There are dangers to the public interest in this situation. They have been the subject of important questions addressed to the Government in recent days by John Fraser, the Conservative front-bencher from Vancouver South.

No Comment

On Monday, Fraser obtained confirmation from Environment Minister Jeanne Sauve that her deputy will leave the department in February to work for a northern pipeline consulting group. She had no comment on the Conservative member's claim that the project will eventually engage her own department, the National Energy Board and the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

Fraser then put a supplementary to Prime Minister Trudeau. "Is the right honorable gentleman satisfied that the oath of secrecy covers the question of conflict of interest and public interest regarding this practice or is it his intention to prepare guidelines on the appointment of deputy ministers and other officials in sensitive positions that would remove for a period of time, after leaving the government, their freedom to work for companies or institutions that may have a direct and immediate interest in areas that involve responsibilities of deputy ministers and those officials?"

There was some confusion because Trudeau didn't hear the original question to Sauve. But he did say that the alternative suggested by Fraser had been considered and rejected. The reason offered was that such a rule applied to civil servants would have to apply also, to members of Parliament.

In two successive efforts to clarify his question, Fraser first asked if the prime minister considered the oath of secrecy sufficient protection and then explained: "The case is that of a deputy minister or other official in a very sensitive position being employed afterwards by the private sector or corporations or individuals that may have a very, very direct interest in the information which those particular people acquired in the course of their responsibilities with the Government."

JOHN FRASER
. . . conflict of interest

Trudeau conceded that the difficulty is a real one, adding that he saw no solution. "I do not think it is a practical alternative to suggest that when officials or ministers or for that matter civil servants or members of parliament have departed from their particular employment that they be in some way restricted in the use of their freedom. I would hope that their oath of secrecy and their innate honesty would guide them in the circumstances that the honorable member suggests."

This invites several comments. If "innate honesty" should be sufficient to reassure the public, why has the government bothered with the guidelines which satisfy government House Leader Mitchell Sharp? In that event, surely, the question is not one that should engage the time of the house.

Trudeau certainly has a point about the ministers. They are on the executive side, have access to confidential information, know the thinking of government can anticipate the likely course of policy. But it is going rather far to suggest that private members are in this position. What the opposition learns as contrasted with what it may suspect is public knowledge. Even those on the government side learn only what is revealed in caucus and this, on the evidence of complaints over the years, seems to be far from exhaustive. The fear of leaks is quite sufficient to induce a notable wariness in cabinet ministers.

Is the case of deputies and other public servants so difficult as to defy solution? This seems to be the Government's position and it is quite certain that the Opposition will not accept it.

Undeniably, Fraser's proposition would involve a limitation on the freedom of such officials when they leave the service to accept private employment. But no one enjoys absolute freedom and, on the prime minister's own showing, their freedom is limited now by the oath of secrecy. Is this sufficient?

Asked for Counsel

The problem is that, without violating the oath, such former public servants can be extremely useful to private firms in dealing with the government. They may well have been recruited for exactly that reason. It is altogether improbable that they will be asked to reveal or would disclose what was in such and such a minute or secret study. But they may well be asked for counsel. Would it be wise to proceed in a particular manner or to emphasize this or that in making a representation? How, in counselling a private firm in what may be a competitive enterprise, are they to shut out of their minds a whole experience?

If a former public servant, after the lapse of two or three years, accepts such a position, there is no particular reason for concern. In sensitive areas, policy changes very quickly. Witness the many resource decisions of the past two years. When there is no time limit, however, when a man is a deputy minister one day and in private employment the next, the problem has an aspect of immediacy which has given rise to concern in other jurisdictions and now looms large in the minds of members of our own parliament.

Immigration

May I have a few remarks on our immigration policy, after viewing Sunday, Nov. 24 CBC television show Come to Us?

This brings up the question of what we expect from immigrants.

Common courtesy toward our Canadian way of life and destiny should be paramount, especially after three or five years' residence.

Regardless of where they came from, being an absentee from their former homeland after the allotted period is, to say the least, of no benefit to either former homeland or their new place of residence. A divided loyalty is of no value whatsoever.

In my mind all immigrants must be put on the basis of three points — attitude, action and behavior.

Let us take attitude first — a high regard for a country, with little or no regard for its own culture formation and destiny is cheating both the immigrant and the country he is living in, more so the country he has left.

Action — a person is known by what he does as by what he does not do. Behavior is governed by both attitude and action, be it good, bad or indifferent.

All three are the sum total of one's make-up for either a good respectful immigrant citizen or a worthless one.

Being generous to a fault in the past and present has been to our disadvantage, as we have more freeloaders who claim that by paying taxes this makes them Canadians. And yet they would be paying much higher taxes with less advantages in their former homeland, a country that today is increasing its tariff rate yearly against Canada's goods and Canadian economy. — Len Skelton, 4068 Grange Road.

A Nature Ramble With Skipper

The salmon run at Goldstream is about over for this year. It has been a very good run and it is estimated that about 5,000 chums and about 200 cohoes came in, which should make a good run in three or four years' time.

It has also been a very good run in the way the fish scattered out and spawned all the way up the river.

But perhaps the most interesting thing about the whole run has been the number of children who have come out of classes to see the event. They have ranged from pre-schoolers to senior high school students. They came out by the busload and in groups of cars.

Their length of stay has been from half an hour to two hours and their attitude was good on the whole. Questions were numerous and some of the children were more interested than others and full of wonder, especially the younger ones, trying to grasp the spawning habits of the fish, what happened and why the fish must die and how they find their way back to Goldstream.

The interest in the different schools was quite noticeable and one could tell if the children had had any preliminary instruction before they came out to see for themselves.

We had very little trouble on the stream — and children were well behaved. In the last week there was a different pattern of questions from the children, now that the gulls were feeding on the dead fish and diving for eggs.

Their main question is why don't we stop them, but when we explain to them that this is the way nature works in cleaning up the river, children begin to understand the life cycle.

Among the children were pupils from a number of private schools, and their attitude seems to be quite different. They seem to have a keen interest in fully understanding the whys and whereas of the salmon's life habits. We found the discipline among the children themselves to be greater than those from the public schools.

I feel certain that the naturalists who have been on duty throughout the spawning run were very good and patient in their attitudes toward the children and they no doubt learned a great deal themselves, even when it was raining very hard and extra groups of students would come in without previous warning, until it seemed we would never get all the kids back into the right buses and cars.

On the whole it has been very good and interesting although at times rather hectic. The time has come when we must build for the future — both for the fish and the children who will want to come and see the salmon spawn.

Brando's Radical Chic

By SALLY QUINN

NEW YORK—"There is something obscene," said Marlon Brando, his face tightening, his brows furrowing, "about the fact that we're dressing up in our monkey suits, and inviting a lot of rich people to raise money for the Indians. It costs a lot to have this thing. And we won't get that much out of it. But if I had it in my backyard I don't know if anybody would be there. So how else do you do it?"

Not, it would seem, by holding a black-tie dinner-dance Tuesday in the gilded, chandeliered ballroom of the Waldorf Astoria Starlight Roof at $100 a person ($125 for patrons) with half of New York's beautiful people mingling with 30 impoverished Indians.

It had the ugly old ring of, well, "radical chic" and the committee members were wringing their hands in fear that someone might publicly draw that comparison.

And though it sounded as if it might be kind of fun and a little different from those ghastly balls everybody is used to, it was just one crisis after the other from the very beginning.

MARLON BRANDO . . . hoopla at the Waldorf

Current Flame

First they had to round up enough people who would pay that kind of money. That task was left to Lucy Saroyan, actress, poet, daughter of William Saroyan, stepdaughter of Walter Matthau, goddaughter of Marlon Brando and his current flame. Lucy Saroyan has a nice collection of assorted rich friends and she managed to put together a list that fluctuated considerably from day to day. Because, it turns out, half the people dropped out at the last minute and new ones appeared and there was even a moment when nobody was coming. She was reportedly in a "state" for days because Brando cared so much. Even so, many who said they were coming and would pay at the door never showed.

Then there was the entertainment. Barbra Streisand had originally agreed to sing. She dropped out, then Bette Milder agreed to sing. But she dropped out. But singers Buffy Ste. Marie, Arlo Guthrie and Harry Belafonte came.

Then there were a lot of celebrities who wouldn't help Brando out because he had never helped them out with their causes.

Money was a big problem. With $100 a plate and 320 invited paying guests, the committee hoped to make $15,000 after the Waldorf got paid. But unfortuantely the volunteer entertainment demanded rehearsal time and Skitch Henderson's orchestra had to be paid overtime. Then the Indians, who were honored guests (all staying at the Roger Smith Hotel), increased in number from 17 to 30, and that put something of a dent in the earnings of the dinner.

And, of course, there were the inevitable press problems. Everybody wanted to come and see Marlon Brando. He was a big draw and he knew it. Nobody really cared about the Indians.

Brando had decided to have a press conference and then keep most of the press out of the dinner. Ethel Kennedy had requested as little press as possible, even though the point of the evening had been as much to get publicity as to raise money. So they banned TV cameras from the dinner, which infuriated the TV people.

Several people waited around to greet the press, including socialite committeewoman Mrs. Nathan Cumming, dressed in a green suede Indian outfit and carrying a Hermes bag, dancer Maria Tallchief and Dr. Wallace Heathe, president of the Association of American Indians.

Sam Cagey, a Lummi Indian, was among those waiting. Cagey, dressed in "a J. C. Penney coat, this is the best I can afford," explained that it was all right to have a black-tie party because "that's their style of life. These charity people, they have a certain criteria to follow. I notice in New York you have to be careful about how you seat yourself and all that."

Velvet Jacket

Brando was a bit late, arriving in black cowboy boots, blue velvet smoking jacket, maroon turtleneck and turquoise beads. He looked pale and a little unhealthy but smiled warmly at the Indians, hugging a few and posing docilely for endless pictures.

He started the press conference with a long exposition on the plight of the American Indians.

"My profession has done more to rewrite history and make myth and magic out of foolishness and lies and murder," Brando said. "No more, that's enough. We've clipped the Indians enough." He said he would campaign to ask producers to end films showing Indians as "savages, stupid, lazy, drunk, violent."

He was obviously sincere, and his description of the Indians' lives and their history was truly moving, particularly because he seemed to care so much. He was mellow and very gentle, a little shy, quite modest and almost placating to the press. He was really begging for the Indians. And he was quite aware that his presence was the reason for all the press. He was aware too, that he found it distasteful, that this was what he had to do to get attention and money for the Indians. Sell himself.

A Principle

"I'm not an Indian," he kept saying. "I don't speak for the Indians. I'm a servant of principle. If something's right, it's right."

At one point, as the photographers clicked away, he stopped and said, "I hope you're thinking about this instead of just taking pictures.

"It's not just me standing here. I know your editors aren't interested in a story about the Indians. They'll want to know, how was he dressed, did he swear, did he pick his nose, You've got to help me get around your editors."

He was even willing to discuss his nonappearance at the Academy Awards, "The bad reaction was from the conservative, staid class that put out those thinking, stupid, blind films where Indians are portrayed as savages. On the whole I think the reaction was positive."

Bilingualism: A Natural Fear

By GEOFFREY STEVENS

OTTAWA — John Fraser, the Conservative MP for Vancouver South, tells of being at an election meeting in 1972 when an old man grilled him about bilingualism. Mr. Fraser defended the Liberal government's language policy and explained why he and his party support it. The old man listened, then made this revealing comment: "Well, that's very patriotic of you, Mr. Fraser, and I guess I've got to go along with you on that. But you just remember there'll never be a Western Prime Minister again."

Everyone in the room understood exactly what he meant.

The old man's observation tells a great deal about the concern that exists among unilingual English-Canadians who are far removed from the national capital, either in distance or in spirit. Some of us who live and work in the capital may be too quick to dismiss as bigotry a sentiment that in many cases is based, not on ill-will, but on fear. It's a perfectly natural fear among people who see their own, their children's and their grandchildren's opportunity of reaching positions of influence and authority closed off by a language policy they cannot fully understand.

This is not to question the need for the Official Languages Act or the government's policy of achieving, as rapidly as possible, a functionally bilingual federal public service. The Act and the policy are enlightened and essential. But no one ever claimed that bilingualism would be easy.

If the country needed any reminder of the difficulties, it got it the other day when Treasury Board President Jean Chretien tabled a report to Parliament on the implementation of the June, 1973, resolution on official languages. His report was revealing in two ways: it showed what a tremendous distance we have yet to travel on the path to a bilingual public service, and it indicated how severely the process may unsettle the old man in Vancouver and hundreds of thousands like him.

There are 281,664 positions in the federal public service (this excludes Crown corporations and various federal agencies) and when the languages resolution was being debated in the spring of 1973, the former Treasury Board President, C. M. Drury, estimated that only about 25,000 positions would have to be designated as bilingual. In other words, the person filling each of those positions would have to be proficient in both English and French.

Since then, however, the government has taken a much closer look at what is involved in creating a bilingual administration and the number of positions requiring both languages has been revised dramatically upward. Mr. Chretien put it at 53,584 — 19 per cent of all the positions.

DRURY

Because of the extent to which the government is decentralized (70 per cent of federal employees work outside the national capital region), these figures do not accurately reflect the immense impact the bilingualism policy is going to have on the central administration. For example, fewer than 1 per cent of the 26,907 federal workers based in British Columbia will need to be bilingual. But 45 per cent of the 79,939 in Ottawa and Hull will have to be.

The figures are even more striking if you take a vertical cross-section of the civil service. Only 25 per cent of typists will have to be bilingual but 93 per cent of 1,039 executives at the top will have to be. This suggests very strongly that if the old man in Vancouver has a grandson with a flair for economics but no aptitude at all for languages, his chances of ever becoming deputy minister of finance are just about nil.

CHRETIEN
. . . gave the figures

Other figures in the Chretien report show the great distance yet to be travelled. Only 46 per cent of the employees who now occupy positions that will require both languages have been judged to be bilingual. Another 7 per cent say they are but haven't been tested. This means that at least 46 per cent are not really — at the moment—linguistically qualified for the jobs they hold.

What's the government to do? Two things — improve and extend the public service language training program, and make a much greater effort to encourage and assist the provinces to start second-language teaching in schools at a much earlier age.

But language training is only a partial answer and education takes a long, long time. The country must go through a transitional period for the next generation or two. Although the old man in Vancouver may understand this, it will not lessen his pain.

What to Do About a Balky UN?

By WILLIAM SAFIRE
New York Times

The most successful diplomat operating in the world today is Salim Salim, ambassador to the United Nations of the United Republic of Tanzania. Who? Of where?

According to high officials at the UN, it was Salim's active bridgework between the African, Arab and Communist nations that helped bring about the most stunning deal in the history of the General Assembly. The Arabs and Communists joined the Africans in suspending South Africa, and the Africans and the Communists joined the Arabs in recognizing the Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO).

Ambassador Salim, now only 32, served as his nation's ambassador to Egypt 10 years ago. In the late 1960s he operated in the People's Republic of China and in North Korea. At the UN, he chairs the committee on decolonization and is regarded as the most adroit of the African diplomats.

He represents Tanzania, a young socialist state formed by the amalgam of Tanganyika and the island of Zanzibar, on the lower east side of Africa.

The unseating of a charter member and the recognition of a non-state is, by any account, a striking diplomatic manoeuvre.

When U.S. State Secretary Henry Kissinger — trusting Egyptian president Anwar Sadat — was passing the word not to worry about the Arab conference at Rabat, Salim was getting and giving commitments based on a reading exactly to the contrary.

After Rabat, the Africans delivered their support of an invitation to the PLO to address the Assembly. Two days before Arafat arrived, the Arabs voted to support the ruling against South Africa's seating by the General Assembly president, who happens to be Algeria's foreign minister. The Chinese communists joined the orchestration. Among other reasons, Salim had once helped them expel Taiwan.

As a result, the atmosphere at the UN these days is similar to the euphoria of the Democratic convention of 1972. In Miami that year, quota systems thrust minorities forward.

At the UN, the Third World delegates are acting as if they were a reflection of the real world's power. They are not. The General Assembly is the "forum," the place where small nations can use moral suasion and publicity to modify Security Council decisions. A podium is a fine thing, but it is not a source of genuine power.

Here stands the U.S., resolutely backed up by Iceland and Bolivia (let's all buy fish in tins), wondering what to do with a runaway General Assembly. Some U.S. policymakers have been going over the alternatives.

1. Pull out of the UN. The Soviets walked out once, and the U.S. was able to use a UN flag to counter the invasion of South Korea. They won't do that again and neither should the U.S., if only to retain veto power.

2. Stop paying its bills. The U.S. has been a primary financial supporter of the UN, and many Americans think the whole shebang would fold up if the U.S. withheld "assessments" as the Soviets sometimes have. Those days are gone. If Americans decline to ante up, the Arabs will happily pick up the tab, perhaps with a generous "you got lunch."

3. Move it to Zanzibar. This has its wistful appeal, and vice-president designate Nelson Rockefeller is not exactly bragging to the judiciary committee that his family donated the Manhattan real estate to the UN, but New York would do well to remain the world capital.

4. Humor it along. This is the alternative the U.S. will probably choose. Instead of politicking to pick up votes, it will treat the voting as inconsequential. Instead of working within the UN on matters of substance, it will deal directly with other powers, which is more or less the way it has operated in the past. Now it will stop pretending the UN is important when it is not.

The tragedy is that the UN should be quite important in one area — peacekeeping among small nations in an inflammable world. By its new disrespect for sovereignty, the body that was formed to help small nations keep the great powers from making war is now making it difficult for great powers to keep small nations from starting wars.

Diplomats and politicians can salaam Ambassador Salim's professional deftness in putting together the deals that led to last month's victories. But this has not been a victory of the UN — rather, a victory over the UN. The organization that could still be averting the Third World War has been made the breeding ground for the Third World War.

Travelling Without Love

RUSSELL BAKER

Good times have been hard on love, marriage and family in the United States, which may help account for the soured spirit with which we meet the return of hard times. Instead of love, marriage and family, we now have sex, cohabitation and nursing homes, which may be dandy when the money is sufficient for footloose and fancy-free living, but don't help much when you're broke.

The modern assault on love, marriage and family as "old-fashioned" shackles soldered on people by antique convention ignores the economic necessity of the harsh age in which Americans, now graying and plump with fat years, found that blood kin and gaiety provided protection from hunger and despair.

In the Depression everybody went to live with an uncle who had a job. They ate his oatmeal at breakfast and his boiled rooster at Sunday dinner, played Monopoly through the night with cousins and aunts, and stood guard against the meter reader, stalling him at the front door until Uncle Harry, who hadn't worked in five years, could pull the "cheaters" out of the cellar fuse box.

On Sunday afternoons Uncle Pete, who lived by his wits in Hoboken, would show up in a battered Kessel or Whippet and take the children for a drive, and the adults, placing family solidarity above the priggish respect for the state, which is now so fashionable among the righteous, would forbear from asking whether the car was "hot."

In these family communes we were practicing survival just as surely as the frontier families had in another era of rapacity, and anyone suggesting that we were victims of an outmoded extended-family convention would have been heard with the same hilarity and mirth we accorded "the Kingfish" and "Amos 'n' Andy" and Herbert Hoover's pledge of a chicken in every pot.

Nowadays we seem less appreciative of fools. Perhaps you have to go almost to the end of the line, and have a glimpse of the worst just over the horizon, to be grateful for the comic relief a first-class fool can provide.

The boom in love corresponded with the drawing together of families, but it was the variety of love that was then called "romance," in which one fell in love, married, went on a honeymoon and, of course, raised a family, or to put it more precisely, strengthened the only social survival unit that seemed to work.

Contemplating this family of the future, one envisioned boys who, at school age, would get part-time jobs to add to the Saturday-morning doughnut fund and girls who could do the housework and pull the "cheaters" if the meter reader paid a surprise call while mother was earning her $12 a week at the laundry. Later, with extraordinary luck, one of them might go to college and earn $5,000 a year, or marry a man who did, thus insuring aunts, uncles, cousins and in-laws a future on easy street.

The love that would lead to this family nirvana was celebrated endlessly in song, and the lyrics usually argued its economic advantages. It was a good time to fall in love, ran a typical lyric, because both bananas and potatoes were cheaper.

When shuffling off to Buffalo — for the Niagara Falls honeymoon, of course — you could have the Pullman porter, "for a little silver quarter, turn the light down low." Love was the emotional equivalent of wealth when a man could find "a million-dollar baby" selling dishes in a five-and-ten-cent store or be "rich as Rockefeller" simply by having the woman of his dreams show him to the sunny side of the street. Even a shanty in old shanty town could be a castle with the proper wife in residence.

On our present excursion into hard times we are travelling without our love to keep us warm, to paraphrase a Depression song's defiant reply to an earlier energy crisis. It is foolish to sing, "bananas are more expensive, potatoes are more expensive; now's the time to fall in love." And when even shanties in old shanty town are going at $50,000, what is there to sing about?

In any case, love, marriage and family have not survived very well the long bout of good times which they helped us survive the Depression to enjoy. Uncles who have jobs these days tend more and more to live in one-bedroom apartments, which they temporarily share with a lover with whom they haven't the slightest intention of shuffling off to Buffalo, and who wants to play Monopoly any more when the most expensive property on the board would barely pay the weekly grocery bills?

So here we are, shed of the shackles of family, and the trap of marriage, and the myth of "romance," and with all this freedom why are we too soured to let a smile be our umbrella?

Cocke's Interest Pleased Hosts

The ministers' wives and two press members rounded out the group.

Barnes, the tall, black, bearded former member of the B.C. Lions, caused the greatest outward sensation of the trip when he donned a sweatsuit early each morning and jogged seven miles through the streets of Peking, towering over the crowds that thronged behind him.

The greatest joke of the trip, for the Chinese and the Canadians, was the inclusion of B.C.'s biggest labor figure and most prominent management figure in the same delegation.

Munro and Timmis were the cause of a never-ending banter of jokes especially when "labor and management were in bed together" in out-of-the-way hotels where the pair were always assigned to share a room.

At the tree-planting ceremony near the grave of Norman Bethune, Munro insisted that Timmis do the spade work while the union leader did the official planting and the Chinese looked slightly bewildered when Timmis followed the lead of other members of the group and pinned as IWA button on his lapel next to an assortment of other B.C. pins.

The Chinese were most delighted by the health minister's great enthusiasm over China's medical system and were probably most perplexed by the detached manner of Alex Macdonald, who wandered around sporting a bright mustard B.C. blazer, an old deer-stalking cap and a never-ending Chinese cigar, and mutter subtle jokes and comments that invariably went over their heads.

The Chinese hosts themselves were a mixed group and ranged from the affable charming head interpreter from the Institute for Foreign Affairs, who could speak several languages and quote Chaucer off the top of his head, to the quiet, uncompromising government official who constantly fussed over the two press members he was responsible for.

During the 11-day visit, the group travelled from China's most northerly porvince to its most southeastern tip and visited its largest cities and smallest villages.

But everywhere they went the routine and protocol were the same and no one dared try to change the pattern.

Most days the group were up by 6:30 a.m. and it was usually 10 p.m. before they finished their tight schedule of activities.

The premier and his wife always travelled in a black limousine at the front of the line and the press always pulled up the rear in car No. 7.

At banquets the Barretts were always at the head table, the government officials at another and Munro and Timmis were stuck "at the proletariat table" with the press.

Banquets were always lengthy affairs with a great deal of toasting and a range of indescribable dishes very different from the Chinese food available in Canada. Most of the group enjoyed the food but before the first week had passed more than one member was longing to trade in the fossilized eggs, the jellyfish and frogs legs for thick juicy steak and baked potato.

At mealtimes the group always presented tiny B.C. dogwood pins to any new Chinese hosts and they soon learned in a rather unsettling incident that the Chinese could accept no gifts or generosity from the foreigners beyond the token pin.

Macdonald had been talking about poetry with the young female interpreter in the group and as the delegation said goodnight in the hotel lobby that evening, he offered to lend her a pocket book of Shakespearean sonnets "just to read for a couple of days."

The gesture was obviously taboo and the embarrassed woman refused, saying she would not "have time for that kind of thing." Macdonald tried to insist she take it but, under the wary eyes of her colleagues, she declined and the attorney-general walked away shaking his head.

In the daily routine that began to develop on the trip, the British Columbians found themselves going through several reception teas and briefing sessions each day.

Every train station, airport hotel, commune, hospital and monument had a large stuffy reception room filled with comfortable chesterfields and low tables set up with tea cups and cigarettes. The group would be ushered in for a rest and a briefing session that could last anywhere from five minutes to half an hour.

The local host explained the history of the area or de scribed the operation of the factory or commune and the speeches were lavishly sprinkled with propaganda-reciting amazing production statistics for the period since the Communist liberation, praising the thoughts of Chairman Mao and decrying the two current devils, Lin Piao and Confucius.

But the delegation soon grew immune to the propaganda around them. They heard it in speeches, they saw it on banners and billboards everywhere and they listened to it over loudspeakers in the fields and on the streets early in the morning. It was even piped into their compartments on the train.

The only time the doctrinaire speeches struck a sour note in the group was at Keking University where the political control exercised over the school and the obvious lack of intellectual freedom and development rankled the sensitivities of some of the delegation.

Each day of the trip had been planned well in advance and the Chinese were loath to make any changes. Often they would ask the delegation members if there was anything special they wanted to do or see but if the group responded with a request they were invariably told there was not enough time to vary from the schedule.

"No time" became the standard response to any special requests and "difficult to say" the standard answer to any probing or unwelcome question.

The group inevitably spend too much time visiting places the Chinese wanted them to see and not enough time touring the factories and other institutions they were anxious to see. Timmis and Munro, fo example, who were invited on the trip because of the lumber trade talks, never had an opportunity to visit any forestry operations.

The communes, factories, homes and families the group did visit were obviously handpicked by the Chinese and it was sometimes difficult to know whether the picture of China created for the British Columbians was an honest one.

Travelling for hours by train, the group never lost sight of people working in the fields or travelling on the roads, and flying over the countryside from the frozen north to the tropical south they saw a continual checkerboard of fields with not a square foot of land left to waste.

But the highlight of every visit was the people the British Columbians were able to meet and the children they saw at day carecentres, kindergartens and schools.

The bright, wide-eyed Chinese children ran out without a moment's hesitation to hug and shake hands with the Canadians and they won the delegation's hearts in a flash with songs and dances. Their warm, friendly faces beamed with pleasure when their guests applauded and it didn't seem to matter that the two-year olds were singing "I love the Chairman in Peking" and the six-year-olds donned army hats to sing and dance to the Song of the Red Star.

Despite their affection nature, the children were above all well-disciplined. That same discipline and energy was reflected in all the people the delegation met and was probably the main characteristic that separated the British Columbians from their hosts.

The Chinese were always neatly dressed in their near-uniforms; they were always on time and constantly concerned about running a smooth show; they never complained or spoke out of turn and it was only near the end that they began to loosen up and make a few jokes on their own.

The B.C. delegation, on the other hand, was a scrambled group, usually casually dressed. Someone in the group was always late or straggling behind; the premier was seldom in his proper spot at the front of the delegation; and nearly everybody in the group upset their hosts by coming down with colds and sore throats.

It was thus a fitting goodbye at Canton railway station with the teary-eyed British Columbians spreading themselves and their gear over the coach seats, madly scrambling to take final pictures of their hosts, checking over last minute travel arrangements and already starting to share nostalgic memories of the trip, while their Chinese hosts stood neatly in a row on the goodbye until the train was platform smilihg and waving out of sight.

Missing Necktie Ousts MP

Times Ottawa Bureau

OTTAWA—Clothes may or may not make the man, but a necktie certainly makes the MP, Roch LaSalle, Conservative member for Joliette found out in the Commons Friday.

LaSalle was recognized by Deputy-Speaker Gerald Laniel and had started asking a question to the Prime Minister during question period when cries from the Liberal benches pointed out that he was not wearing a necktie.

Laniel interrupted LaSalle, told him that he was not properly dressed for the House and asked him to please leave the Commons to find a necktie.

LaSalle, a snappy dresser but never overly-mod, pointed out that he was indeed wearing a tie, of the Ascot variety, and that it was "probably wider than any other tie in this House."

The contentious object was tucked inside his shirt, and he proceeded to bring it out, letting it hang out in all it's Conservative-blue glory.

LaSalle was asked a second time to please "go to your office and change."

B.C. CASH BUYS SWAN LAKE LAND

Saanich has received $127,500 from the B.C. government to complete purchase of three acres for the Swan Lake-Christmas Hill Nature Centre.

Purchase of the land from the J. D. Herda property practically completes the land assembly around Swan Lake. It includes 234 feet of water frontage.

The Nature Centre is a joint Federal, Provincial, Saanich and School District 61 project.

The land acquisition program was also Saanich's number one greenbelt choice and was supported by the Capital Regional District and the B.C. Land Commission.

When the project is completed, it will include an aviary, weather station, observation tower, children's farm unit, water trail, allotment garden area, forest management area, botanical garden, nature study area and marsh study site.

$13,000 Raised in Fast

About 100 Victorians took part in a 40-hour fast and raised $13,000 for a relief program called World Vision of Canada.

The Victoria contributions are part of the $400,000 raised across Canada this year.

A total of $180,000 has been spent on specific projects in Bangladesh, Niger and Upper Volta. The rest of the money raised goes to emergency aid in India and Africa and World Vision's ongoing projects in various parts of the world.

'Bars on Window' Next If Group Home Fails

Langley feels the physical force was necessary initially, "but I believe the most important help will be love and the positive re-inforcing of behaviors."

The Vic West home is officially labelled a "containment" home, meaning the people who run it have the authority to keep a child there, by physical force, if necessary.

Ivan Carlson, the assistant regional director for children's resources in the Capital Region human resources department, is convinced that the department should not be in the containment home business.

Officially, the reason for the cutoff of funds to Langley and the other home workers, is that the department "is no longer financing containment homes in Capital Region," Carlson said.

To Langley, the normal group homes in the area serve an important function, but he feels his does too.

"The kids in this home are the most difficult of the difficult," Langley says.

The home is the last step for teen-agers who have tried other group home situations and failed to get along.

It is the last step before being elevated to adult court and the last step before they will be sent to some sort of "bars on the window" type facility.

"The government says it wants these sort of hard-core people be helped in the community, and this is what the house is doing."

When a boy is first put in the containment home, usually at the request of a social worker, or more often, a juvenile court judge, he goes on two or three weeks of "total containment".

This means that he is not allowed to go anywhere unsupervised. If he wants to go to a movie, the worker goes with him. The idea of the total containment, Langley says, is to form a relationship between the worker and child.

After the initial weeks in the home, the child is given "earned leisure time."

"If their freedom works, they get more of it, if it doesn't work, we take some of that freedom away," Langley says.

"Eventually it is the relationship the kid has formed with the worker that is keeping him in bounds."

For some, the program seems to have worked.

Cliff Coombs, 17, was sent to the Vic West home after he had broken down both a different group home and a foster home situation. He had been involved in a fair amount of petty crime.

Cliff has fought as much or more trhan Langley and the other workers in the home, to keep it opened.

Cliff has fought as much or more than Langley and the other workers in the home, to keep it opened.

On his own, he approached human resources officials and asked if they would keep it open.

"This jplace is doing me some good," Cliff says.

"I enjoy it here, but I guess that really shocks a lot of people when I tell them that."

For Cliff, the Viv West home has done more for him than any other.

"The others are slack and there's no direction and nobody around to give you a kick in the rear when you really need it.

Neither Langley nor Chuck Holm, another child care worker in the home, agree with the use of discipline by itself.

"But when discipline and love are equally balanced, the system works," Holm says.

Most other social workers, Holm says, try to avoid, at any cost, upsetting a child.

"But mostly it is discipline that upsets the child and so if you avoid upset, you avoid all discipline."

Langley says there is room in the system for all kifds of programs — permissive and strict.

"A child needs a good foundation to be able to handle permissiveness. Most of the kids we are dealing with in this home don't have that foundation and that's what we try to give them."

Terry Brown, the supervisor of three group homes run by the Bishop Cridge Society in Victoria, says most social workers find the idea of restraining a child by force abhorrent.

The social work and education fields are now more than ever operating on the principle that children have rights too, especially if that "child" happens to be a teen-ager approaching the age of majority.

Recommendations made by the Berger Commission on Family and Children's Law include the right of a child to sue a parent or a substitute parent, such as a group home worker, for the use of "unreasonable" force against him.

But right now, Brown says, there is no alternative to containment for the hard-core type of child that Langley is working with.

Maple Bay Accident Kills Two

Two youths were killed and a third critically injured after a one-car crash in Maple Bay Friday night.

Duncan RCMP said the car in which the three were riding left the road and crashed after the driver lost control on a corner on Maple Bay Road.

Dead are Kim Smith, 17, of Miller Road, Duncan, the driver of the car, and Mark Bulcock, 18, of Koksilah Road, Duncan.

Harry Russel Dexter, 17, of 2726 Herd Road, Duncan, was listed in critical condition in hospital today, RCMP said.

An inquest into the deaths will likely be ordered, a police spokesman said.

Aid Sought In Finding Getaway Car

Oak Bay police are asking help from the public in locating a car and two youths, suspects in an early morning break-in at a grocery store in which a number of cartons of cigarettes were stolen.

A police spokesman said the car is bright yellow, possibly a Japanese model, with two red racing stripes down each side ending with the letters ST.

The youths are described as in their late teens, both 5'6", medium build, with long darkish hair.

One youth was wearing a checkered jacket and jeans, the other a tan colored jacket and jeans.

Anyone with information is asked to call Oak Bay police at 592-2424. All calls will be treated confidentially.

There are a few things you should know about the new rent increase limit

THE RULES:

- Effective January 1, 1975, residential rent increases are limited to 10.6% of the rent presently being charged. The rule applies to any dwelling containing two or more rented units, and will be administered by the Rent Review Commission.
- There must be at least a twelve month interval between one rent increase and the next.
- Tenants can legally refuse to pay any rent increase over the 10.6% limit, subject to the exceptions.
- Tenants must be given three month's notice of any rent increase, with the one exception that notice of rent increase given on or before November 30, 1974 may have an effective date on or between January 1 and February 28, 1975.

THE EXCEPTIONS:

- Certain major renovations may entitle an owner to increase rents over the 10.6% limit. These improvements must have been started since May 3, 1974, and do not include normal maintenance and repairs.

  Landlords may consult the Rent Review Commission for details, particularly if planning renovations which might justify rent increases.
- Mobile home pad rent increases may exceed 10.6%, but only if prior approval is received from the Rent Review Commission.
- New rental dwellings accepting tenants on or after January 1, 1974, are exempt from rent increase regulations for a period of five years.
- Premises renting for $500 per month or more are exempt from the 10.6% increase limit.

FIREPLACE DESIGN TECHNICAL FIRST

PRINCE GEORGE (CP) — A local man has invented a fireplace he says is the first technical breakthrough in fireplace design since the Franklin stove was created in 1740.

Bill Shaw says his invention works at 90 per cent efficiency compared with 18 per cent for ordinary fireplaces.

Even in this chilly city in central British Columbia where temperatures of 40 below are not uncommon, Mr. Shaw thinks his fireplace generates enough heat to supplement a furnace and, in some cases, provide the only heating source for a house.

The fireplace resembles a conventional model but the difference lies in a duct that draws in fresh air from outside the house instead of using up air inside the building.

The air flow enters the heating chambers of the fireplace, rises through a damper and is expelled into the room through a series of vents. The warm air then circulates by convection with cooler air being drawn into the hearth.

CAN CHOKE FIRE

Conventional fireplaces rely on air inside the building and in modern homes where windows and doors are tight fitting, air is used up and the resulting slight vacuum effect can choke a fire. Air that has been heated is wastefully drawn up the chimney.

In older homes, a roaring fire in the hearth, in its quest for air, draws in draughts across the floor from cracks in doors and windows.

Mr. Shaw says fireplaces installed in modern houses are strictly a status symbol. As a mason, he has installed his share and says building an inefficient product for such a high cost bothered him.

"I've seen so many that are complete junk—nothing but junk—and I resented putting them in. I've seen an awful lot of smoky fireplaces too. Fireplaces today are basically the same as my grandfather built them years ago," says Mr. Shaw who came to Canada from England in 1966.

He built one of his fireplaces for a friend but couldn't find anyone to back him financially for some months.

He now has two partners in Nanaimo on Vancouver Island—Ivan Staton and Peter Jensen, who have supplied the money and the know-how to start manufacturing the fireplaces.

Seven of the new fireplaces have been installed—handmade models welded in Nanaimo—but Mr. Shaw says soon the fireplaces will be stamped out in Edmonton where there is a steel mill, and shipped to B.C. for assembly.

A patent on the fireplace is pending in Canada and the partners have applied for a United States patent.

The fireplace has been well received in the Prince George area.

Fire chief Floyd Stene said he was impressed and has ordered one for his home.

Jerry Mantle, Central Mortgage and Housing Corp. chief inspector for north central B.C., says the fireplace meets all national building codes and has performed well in tests.

Mr. Shaw says that with increasing fuel costs, his new fireplace can save homeowners many heating dollars, especially in areas which have an abundance of firewood.

Mr. Shaw says the unit sells at about $245 compared with $300 for similar conventional models.

"But with the price of steel going up every day, who knows how long it's going to stay that way?"

FAO Chief Issues Call For 'Urgent' Food Meeting

ROME (UPI) — The head of the UN Food and Agriculture Organization will be in New York next week to discuss how to raise $1.8 billion for emergency food to feed the starving people of the world.

FAO Director General Addeke Boerma summoned the nations that grow most of the world's grain to an "urgent intergovernmental consultation" at the organization's headquarters here Friday.

The grain-producing nations agreed that 7.5 million tons of emergency food aid was needed before next summer's crops come in, and that it would take $1.8 billion to pay for it.

The representatives of 13 countries and the Common Market left it to the United Nations to find most of the financing.

Boerma said he would meet in New York Dec. 4 with representatives of the United Nations and its various subsidiary organizations to talk in detail about funds.

Boerma said he might then ask UN Secretary General Kurt Waidheim to appeal directly to the newly-rich oil countries and other potential new donors to help.

The United States, the world's largest donor of food aid for two decades, joined in the agreement, but U.S. delegate Richard Bell told newsmen at the end of the day-long meeting that the United States considered estimates of need inflated.

"I question whether the whole 7.5 million tons will get out there," he said. "$1.8 million has to be raised to finance it and that's a lot of money."

Bell said the United States made no new aid commitment but would provide about 1 million tons of emergency aid under its existing appropriation of almost $1 billion for food aid in this fiscal year.

Canada will begin fulfilling the pledge of 1 million tons of grain aid a year made at the world food conference earlier this month after the start of its fiscal year April 1, Bell said.

This will help to bring aid already paid for to almost 2 million tons, he said.

Indian delegate C. L. Joneja told the meeting his nation needed 2.5 million tons, mostly in wheat.

Bell said Bangladesh asked for 2.8 million tons, Pakistan put its need at 1.5 million tons and other counties requested lesser amounts, he said.

Odd Tree Brought Fame To 'Backwoods Baronet'

By DENNIS BELL

Fifty years ago Eric Anstruther, a young Scottish surveyor, was strolling along a river bank in the Queen Charlotte Islands when he discovered a golden tree, a lone beacon in a forest of green conifers. Since then both man and tree have achieved some measure of frame.

The golden Sitka spruce of Juskatla has emerged as a scientific enigma, puzzled over by botanists and foresters, while Anstruther went on to inherit two baronetcies and a large Scottish estate on the brink of financial disaster. He became Sir Windham Eric Francis Carmichael-Anstruther, Baronet of Nova Scotia, Baronet of Great Britain and Hereditary Grand Carver to the Royal Household in Scotland.

Many scientists maintain that the golden spruce he found is without parallel, a genetic accident that may never be repeated by nature and that has yet to be duplicated by man under experimental conditions. It is now 161 feet tall and bathed in the same golden sheen which enthralled the young surveyor in 1924.

Botannical Puzzle

Unique in the sea of giant green trees which carpet Graham island, largest of the 150 islands which form the sparsely populated Queen Charlotte group 60 miles off the north coast of British Columbia, the golden spruce remains a botanical puzzle.

Anstruther spotted the tree on the west bank of the Yakoun River near what is now MacMillan Bloedel's Juskatla logging camp. The man who became affectionately known as the "Backwoods Baronet" following his nine years in Canada recalls he was "dumbstruck by the slight of the golden wonder tree."

No less intriguing is Sir Windham himself, now the 74-year-old Laird of Carmichael, a 4,000-acre estate in the Scottish lowlands, 40 miles southwest of Edinburgh. The bearded laird presides over his domain from an 18th century farmhouse. His ancestral now a crumbled ruin which was abandoned after the Second World War.

An explorer and surveyor by profession, his inheritance came as a complete surprise in 1928 on the death of his distant cousin Frederick. The telegram informing Ric Anstruther of his new status was poked through the flap of a weatherbeaten tent at Menzies Bay on Vancouver Island where he was roughing it as a member of a timber surveying team.

"I was only a distant cousin of the previous laird and never expected to inherit," Sir Windham recalled in an interview.

32 Years Away

"It was three months before I went to Scotland. I liked the life so much during my years in Canada that I was only going to stay six months in Scotland, then return." But it was to be 32 years before Sir Windham again set foot in Canada.

Several other spruce trees have been discovered in the Queen Charlottes since Sir Windham's find evidencing similar but less spectacular golden traits. However, not a single golden specimen has been found to date in the huge spruce stands on the B.C. mainland.

Grant Ainscough, MacMillan Bloedel's chief forester, says the tree at Juskatla may be a genetic freak that is unable to fix chlorophyll. We suspect that it can manufacture chlorophyll like any other tree but that it breaks down in sunlight to give the golden color."

No one has a theory as to why this phenomenon is peculiar to the Queen Charlottes, although there is a great deal of spruce in the islands that has evolved in isolation from mainland stands, increasing the odds of a genetic accident through inbred pollination.

Botanists and foresters have been testing the golden spruce and attempting to grow other large specimens from cuttings and graftings for more than 40 years, with little success to date.

A decade ago, 20 cuttings were brought down from the Charlottes and planted at MacMillan Bloedel's Nanaimo arboretum on Vancouver Island. At last count only three survived, despite meticulous care and attention. The three survivors have retained their golden tones but refuse to grow at the same rate as their green brothers. Nature appears reluctant to duplicate a rare, beautiful mistake.

MacMillan Bloedel plans to preserve the Juskatla golden spruce for as long as it lives. Pending approval from the provincial forest service, the company will establish a 12-acre reserve surrounding the tree.

Visitors will have access to the tree from a trail that leads to the opposite bank of the Yakoun River from the Juskatla-Port Clements road.

Dr. Oscar Sziklai of the University of B.C.'s forestry faculty has been studying the golden spruce intermittently for the last six years and is recognized as the foremost expert on it.

Finest Example

He says the Jusktla tree is the finest example of this particular type of mutation known in the world and represents a unique opportunity to study the genetics of trees, pollen distribution and the photo-oxidization process involved in its chlorophyll breakdown.

Sir Windham has his own theories about his find. He has long maintained that the golden spruce results from a genetic accident: "That tree must be to others of its species as an albino human is to other people — lack of pigment so colorless hair.,"

Born in South Africa, Sir Windham was raised by other members of the Anstruther family in Britain after his parents died and entered the Royal Military College at Sandhurst late in the First World War.

However, the war had ended by the time he was ready to obtain a commission and Sir Windham decided to chuck the military life to go adventuring in Canada, arriving in 1920 on his 20th birthday.

He rode the hard way across Canada, hopping freight trains with a pet German shepherd dog, and worked intermittently in the prairies prior to arriving in Vancouver in 1921.

Looking over his dwindling finances one evening over a glass of beer in a downtown Vancouver beer parlour, Sir Windham strayed into conversation with a man who turned out to be a civil engineer. When the engineer learned that the future Laird of Carmichael had studied trigonometry at Sandhurst, Ric Anstruther was hired on the spot and was on his way to a coastal surveying job in a matter of days.

In the years that followed he mapped substantial portions of the B.C. coast and Vancouver Island, but he always preferred the Queen Charlottes.

"It was beautiful country, hardly any inhabitants except the Haida Indians, and long silver beaches on the east coast," he recalled many years later.

Early in 1924 he moved into the Yakoun River country with a survey team, and a base camp was established 21 miles upstream from the Yakoun mouth.

"We towed our birchbark canoes in shallow water with salmon brushing against our legs. And I remember one salmon leaping into the canoe which already had four of us and supplies in it."

During his days off and after-work hours Sir Windham liked to ramble into the silent forest alone and "it was on one of these trips that I found the golden spruce. That tree is becoming a starlet, or at least one of the minor wonders of the world.

"I didn't even make an axe-mark on it, being, I suppose, a bit overcome by its strangeness in a forest of green."

The Haida Indians native to the Queen Charlottes were aware of the tree and it had been seen as early as 1885 by white explorers, who thought it was interesting but did nothing about it. Sir Windham was the first to recognize it as an important botanical rarity and bring it to the attention of scientists.

When the small cuttings he took reached the outside world a few months later the samples created a sensation among botanists and foresters. At first it was thought that Sir Windham had discovered an entirely new species of spruce. Then it was believed that the tree was suffering from some rare disease. Both ideas proved incorrect, and the question of what caused the golden hue is still unresolved.

At the time, the discovery had little impact on the life of Ric Anstruther and he continued to move from one surveying job to the next. Within four years, however, his entire life had changed.

Inherited Title

John F. Jacobsen, a Norwegian-born forester now retired and living in Vancouver, was Sir Windham's best friend and tentmate at Menzies Bay on Dec. 4, 1928, the day the young Scot learned he had inherited the title and estate.

"The telegram arrived and he turned pale with surprise," Jacobsen recalled.

Sir Windham and Jacobsen parted company for what both thought would be only a matter of a few weeks or months at most. It proved to be more than three decades before they got together again in Vancouver, over a huge loggers' breakfast of pancakes at a downtown hotel.

When Sir Windham arrived in Scotland, the estate teetered on the brink of financial collapse. Sir Windham was forced to sell off 5,000 acres immediately to cover steep succession duties and has since disposed of smaller parcels that have pared the estate down to 4,000 acres from the 13,000 he inherited.

Sir Windham's title was itself born out of financial desperation — the diminished royal purse of Charles 1 of England. To meet his Royal Army payroll, Charles created 150 new baronetcies covering Nova Scotia and Scotland and made these available to Scottish noblemen at 1,095 Pounds each.

Stumpage Rate Cuts Welcome

VANCOUVER (CP) — G. L. Draeseke, president of the Council of Forest Industries of British Columbia, said Friday he welcomes Resources Minister Bob Williams announced changes in stumpage rates.

Williams said B.C. initerior forest operators, hit hard by a slump in the lumber market, will be charged only minimum stumpage on trees and independent coastal operators will have their levies cut ni half.

The new rates are retroactive to Nov. 1 and continue until March 31, 1975.

"The only thing that can be done with B.C. is to moderate the costs of production," Draeseke said. "Mr. Williams' announcement contains steps in this direction and we welcome it."

He said, however, "charging different stumpage prices to different people for trees of equal value is a novel concept and should be approached cautiously."

Draeseke said the industry's major problem continues to be the world market situation.

T. G. Rust, president of Weyerhaeuser of Canada Ltd., said in Kamloops Friday that the reduction comes too late to help combat the situation caused by depressed lumber markets and the cutback in housing starts.

The reductions will encourage logging during the winter and maintain employment, he said, but the reductions will not help sawmills move their lumber.

Rust said the reduction of stumpage to $1.10 for a hundred cubic feet of wood harvested may enable some independent mills to continue operating at present price levels.

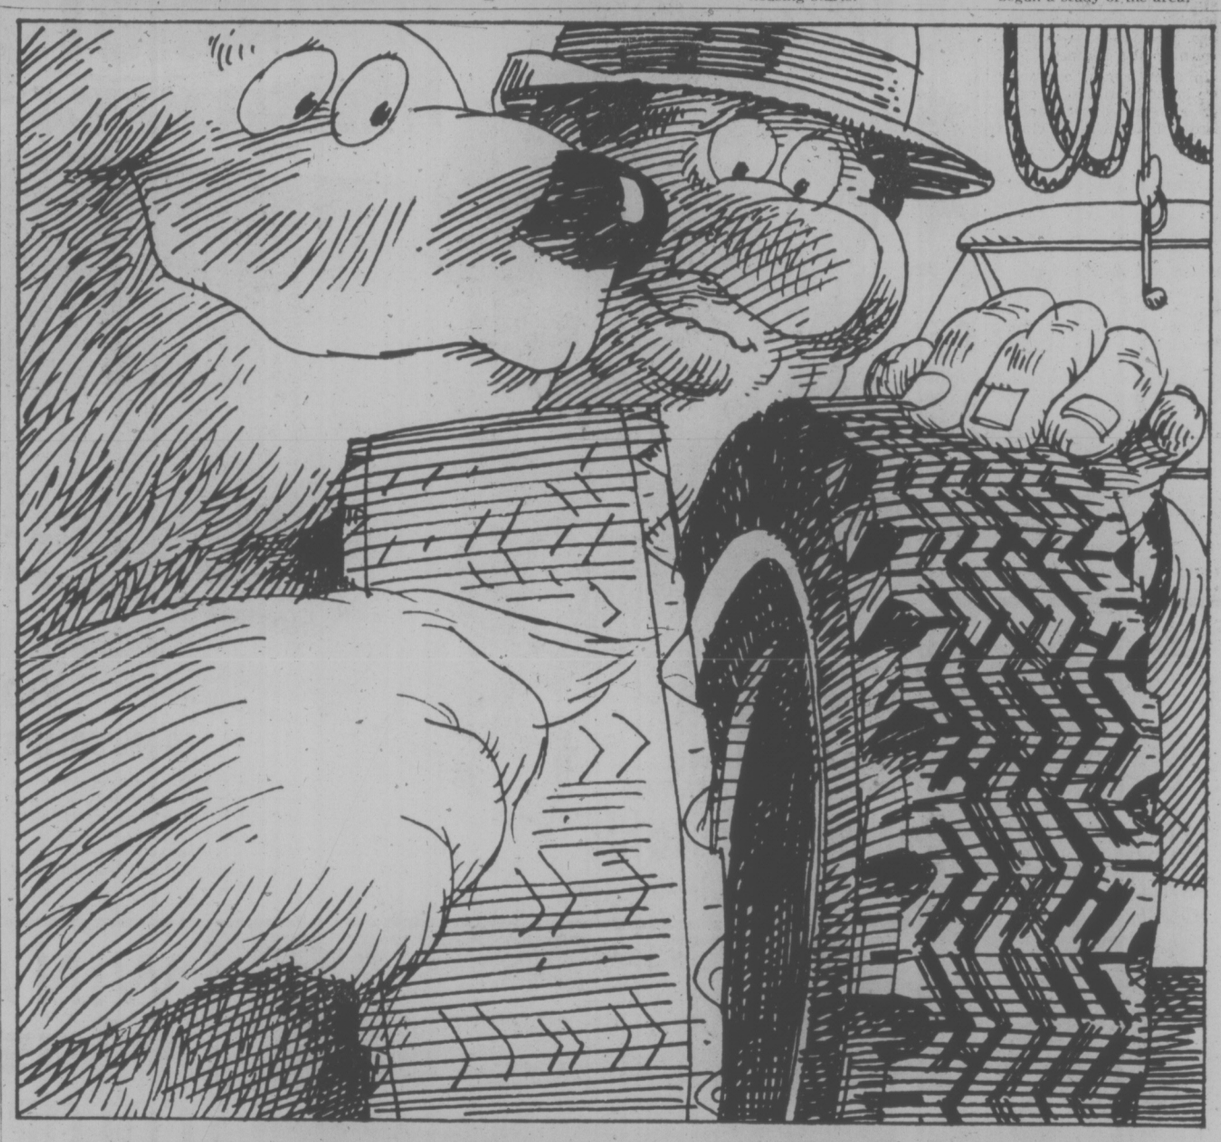
B.C. Forest Service officials have estimated that most of the interior operators were already paying the $1.10 rate before the announcement.

For coastal independent firms, the stumpage rate has been reduced to 10 per cent of log sale values in the Vancouver forest district and eight per cent of sales for the north coastal area.

Williams also announced a one-year moratorium on logging and road construction and other development in the wilderness core of the Bonaparte-Tranquille forest area and the Lac Du Bois area.

The moratorium will give the government and local groups adequate opportunity to study the roadless core area without adversely affecting existing or planned logging operations, he said.

Williams said the chairman of the provincial environment and land use committee has begun a study of the area.



BEFORE THE JUDGE

A 17-year-old was remanded to Dec. 13 for sentencing for seven offences, including four burglaries.

Leo Chancey Vose, 7795 East Saanich, pleaded guilty to breaking into the residence of John Byrne, 760 Haliburton, on two occasions, stealing a tool box, camera, wine, beer and money worth $207 Oct. 29 and taking eight beer bottles worth $2.40 Nov. 19.

He entered the home of Thomas MacDonald, 916 Haliburton, twice on Oct. 29 and stole a camera, radio and speaker, a clock and liquor, including two bottles of brandy regarded as collector's items. Total value of the stolen items was about $440.

The other offences concerned his possession of stolen tools worth $50, stealing a $15 radio from a car parked on Wesley and being in possession of cannabis resin.

A 68-year-old man with a criminal record dating back 45 years received a six-month jail sentence when he appeared in Victoria provincial court Friday afternoon.

Prosecutor Gordon Macdonald said Lindley was currently on bail on another theft charge laid Nov. 17. A trial date had been set in the matter for next March.

Macdonald also noted the accused had been charged with possession of stolen property last July 20 and added that charge had not been disposed of by the court yet either.

The prosecutor read parts of Lindley's record which included a number of theft charges in recent years.

"I could say the reason is I'm an alcoholic," the accused said. "But I don't like to use that as an excuse."

Judge Edmund St. Jorre remarked: "You've a long depressing record dating back to 1929 — the year the great Depression started . . . I sentence you to six months."

"You couldn't make that shorter could you?" Lindley responded.

"No," St. Jorre answered curtly.

A Halloween trick proved no treat for Mark William Cooper, 18, of 225 Gorge, who pleaded guilty to dangerously discharging fireworks.

St. Jorre fined the youth $100 after hearing a police report which stated Cooper fired a roman candle type fireworks from his car window at a group of youngsters in the 400 block Craigflower 7:15 p.m. Oct. 31. The fireballs almost struck two young children, police said.

Stealing two bags of walnuts and almonds worth $2.72 ended up costing Donald Wayne Peter Tymusko a $150 fine and a criminal record.

Victorian Talks Break Off

Talks between representatives of The Victorian newspaper and the Vancouver Typographical Union, Local 226, broke off Friday.

Union president Ed Fairbairn charged the newspaper with negotiating in "bad faith." Publisher John Damgaard was not available for comment.

The brief meeting Friday was the third negotiating session since the union was certified by the B.C. Labor Relations Board to represent 27 printing production employees of the thrice-weekly throwaway paper.

Fairbairn said after Friday's meeting that both sides had agreed earlier that all benefits would be made retroactive to Nov. 22, the date of the previous negotiating meeting, but company negotiators changed their mind at Friday's meeting.

CORD RECALL LAUNCHED

TORONTO (CP) — Noma Lites Canada Ltd. is recalling extension cords for checking after finding bare wires in about one of every 1,000 cords checked, H. T. Beck, president of the company, said Friday.

He said the cords range from six to 15 feet in length, are brown, white or gold, and the word "Noma" is stamped on connectors.

Cords recalled from warehouses and retailers will be checked and defective ones removed. A consumer who returns a defective cord to the store where it was bought will get an exchange, Beck said.

He said the company's annual production of extension cords is "hundreds of thousands."

The problem with the cords is not on the same scale as the company's recall two years ago of Christmas lights that could have become hazardous, Beck said. About two-thirds of 200,000 strings of lights were returned after advertisements in daily newspapers and magazines.

500 Big Tanks Added To NATO Arsenal

BRUSSELS (Reuter) — NATO, spurred on by the tactical lessons of the October, 1973, Middle East war, is strengthening its armored and anti-tank forces in central Europe.

Vastly outnumbered by the 18,000 tanks the Warsaw pact nations have in the region, the Western allies are modernizing their tank forces in West Germany and Denmark.

Improvements are also being made in anti-tank gun forces and especially in portable anti-tank missiles.

The European member states of NATO alone have added more than 1,500 armored vehicles to their arsenals this year. Of these 500 were big battle tanks.

But NATO has only about 7,000 tanks in the region, which gives a 2½-to-one advantage to the Russians and their allies.

The United States has pledged to add two combat brigades and other specialist troops to their forces in West Germany. This will bring U.S. combat effectiveness in central Europe back up to its 1966 level.

NATO troops are becoming increasingly effective in anti-tank warfare through the continuing development of new missiles, many of them guided to their targets visually through hair-like wires joining the missiles to electronic control boxes.

A main impetus for the modernization of allied tanks and anti-armor forces was the lessons learned in the last Middle East war.

The initial popular belief was that the new wire-guided missiles, used with such effect by the Arabs against Israeli armor in the early days of the October war, had made the tank obsolete. But subsequent studies showed that most tank "kills" in the conflict were scored by other tanks.

"The tank is still the main land forces weapon," a leading armored expert at NATO headquarters said, adding that the war had called for new tactics in handling tanks.

He said armor would no longer be able to sweep out ahead of the main infantry formation to wreck havoc in the enemy's rear echelons because they could now be picked off by an infantryman with a missile, hiding in a bush.

There is still a strong feeling among NATO experts that NATO's four main battle tanks, the British Chieftain, the German Leopard, the American M-60 and the French AMX-30, are superior to those of the Warsaw pact, the T-54, T-55 and the more modern T-62.

Although NATO strategists are unhappy about the ratio of alliance and Warsaw pact tanks in the central region, they say any force would need three or five to one odds in its favor to mount an attack.

Any such concentration in East Germany, Poland or Czechoslovakia would be sensed by NATO's electronic intelligence devices, a field in which NATO has a clear superiority over the Warsaw pact, and countering measures could be taken, such as mounting air strikes to cut roads.

Do you rent an apartment or a house?

If so, you are probably eligible for a $30 or $80 Renter's Grant.

The Renter's Resource Grant is a form of tax relief, similar to the Homeowner's Grant, to renters in British Columbia.

Tenants under 65 years of age receive $30. Those 65 and over receive $80.

Who is eligible?

If you have occupied rented accommodations in British Columbia for one year, you are probably eligible.

Only one grant a year is allowed per rental unit.

Britons Air Sex Problems To 'Manhunter'

By PAUL IREDALE

LONDON (Reuter) — Every Monday evening in recent weeks, Londoners have telephoned a minister's daughter to discuss their sexual problems on radio.

The weekly discussion program produced favorable ratings for London's only 24-hour talk station, London Broadcasting Co., but was just another string to the liberated bow of Fiona Richmond, a 25-year-old English girl.

Fiona first became a name to the British public through her articles in the monthly magazine Men Only and her involvement with one of the kings of the British nightclub scene, Paul Raymond.

Her column, in which she describes the sexual performance of men she meets on her travels around the world, is read in 22 countries and the magazine has a circulation of half a million copies a month.

"I road test men just like you road test cars," she says.

MADE DOCUMENTARY

She made a television documentary with an Anglican bishop earlier this year, called What the Actress Said to the Bishop, which won a gold award at the Atlanta Film Festival out of 2,000 entries from 32 countries.

She also stars in a sex comedy.

Fiona Richmond was born Julia Harrison, the daughter of a Church of England clergyman and vicar of the parish of Hillbrough, a rural community in the eastern county of Norfolk.

She qualified for university, was advised by her headmistress to join the women's army, but tried instead to become an actress, auditioning unsuccessfully for several drama schools.

After a short spell as a stewardess, she joined London's Playboy Club and worked for 18 months as a croupier.

Fiona did not like the atmosphere there. But she saved enough during her time to buy land in the Canary Islands and a sports car.

SWAM NUDE

Her break came when she took a job as a nude swimmer in London's West End sex comedy Pyjama Tops, and under the unlikely name of Amber St. George, she became a human goldfish.

The show was staged by Paul Raymond, who later launched Men Only. It was during the discussions for the magazine that Fiona suggested writing a month-by-month account of her amorous exploits.

The column made her name, and between romping round like a bronzed amazon on the West End stage, and agreeing to become pin-up girl for an increasing number of servicemen's quarters around the world, she still takes time off to find her lover for next month's episode.

Her manhunt has taken her from eastern Europe to Japan.

"In Moscow, I had to persuade an Armenian film crew to set up a man for me and tell me what to whisper to him," she says. As ever, Fiona got her man.

She talks of how she lived with the same man for a number of years, and how she would like, eventually, to be married. "But I'm not looking for a permanent relationship right now," she says.

She is writing an autobiography which she describes as a comic sexual manual and would "like to write children's books in the future."

Summit Near Paris

PARIS (Reuter) — French President Valery Giscard d'Estaing and Soviet leader Leonid Brezhnev will hold summit talks on Dec. 5 and 6 at the Chateau of Ramouilet, about 30 miles south of Paris, the Elysee Palace announced meeting were already known Thursday. The dates of the but the site had not been confirmed previously.

SENIORS SPEED FOR 300 MILES

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (UPI) — The starting line was a parking lot. The finish line was a posh hotel on the "strip." And the race? A 300-mile run from Hollywood to Las Vegas by nine senior citizen distance runners.

The runners, aged 60 to 75, broke their own world record Friday when they sped to the front of Sahara Hotel on the "Strip" at 2:42 p.m. PST. They broke their 1972 record of 41 hours, 40 minutes by one hour and seven minutes.

The oldsters undertook the marathon race to prove that "life begins at 60." This marked the fifth consecutive year the group made the run.

He said the toughest part of the run was a mountain pass at 4,600 feet elevation where strong winds whipped through the area.

Women's Year Money 'Wasted'

VANCOUVER (CP) — Half the money allotted by the federal government to celebrate International Women's Year (IWY) is being wasted on conferences and advertising, the dean of women at University of British Columbia said Thursday.

Dr. Margaret Fulton, speaking at a university conference said that $2.5 million of the $5 million budget administered by the secretary of state department has "been creamed off for conferences — designed for I don't know who."

She said another $500,000 went to a Toronto advertising agency.

Ms. Fulton said a recent IWY special bulletin listing sources of funds for research and fellowships was "not worth mentioning, because none of the sources have any funds, anyway."

The secretary of state for urban affairs allowed $5,000 and Canada Manpower set aside $10,000 for major research projects involving women.

Ms. Fulton urged university women to work within their own faculties to tap available funds for special lecturers and projects relating to women.

The dean said a proposed pavilion, designed and built by women from the UBC school of architecture, may have to be shelved for lack of funds.

She said the United Nations' Habitat conference, which is expected to bring more than 30,000 visitors to the campus in 1976, may assist ine funding the pavilion.

"It's an extraordinary, visionary project, and there are no funds available unless we get help from Habitat, but it might come true," Ms. Fulton said.

In a later interview, Ms. Fulton said the $5 million IWY budget could have been used more purposefully.

"I would have preferred to see it divided up among communities, rather than being spent centrally, so we would get more feedback from the grass roots movement of women," she said.

HUNT

Lunch-Bag Toting Billionaire Dies at 85

DALLAS (UPI) — He walked with a stoop, wore ready-to-wear suits and carried his lunch in a paper bag. He was a grade school dropout whose fortune was estimated at anywhere from $1.5 billion to $5 billion.

H. L. Hunt, who worked as a farm hand and a mule-skinner before amassing a fortune in oil, died Friday of complications arising from old age. He was 85 and some say he was the richest man in the world.

A self-made man who feared the Communist menace and said in 1967 that "we have perhaps three, four, five years to save this republic," he devoted much of his time and much of the money that he did spend to efforts to spread his conservative views. He called them "freedom education."

A main vehicle for his message has been Life Line, a daily taped radio commentary on public affairs that began in 1958 and was heard at its peak in 1971 on 531 stations.

Others have included a newspaper column that he wrote, mostly for weekly papers in the south and southwest and Facts Forum, a predecessor to Life Line, on which he spent a reported $3.5 million and which produced and distributed radio and television programs from 1951 to 1956.

Critics were quick to tag the philosophy promoted through these channels as conservative or ultraconservative, but Hunt rejected the labels, preferring to call his philosophy "constructivism."

"You can never be accused of being too constructive," he said.

Although he was perhaps the most successful of the Texas oil wildcatters, a fabulous breed of men whose rags-to-unbelievable-riches life stories and lavish lifestyles seized and held the American imagination, Hunt remained almost unknown to the public at large until about 25 years ago.

In fact, he was said to have been almost a recluse until 1948 when Life magazine published a fuzzy photograph of him standing on a Dallas street corner, and announced he was the richest man in the nation.

That prompted him to give his first interview, at the age of 59, to a reporter for the Dallas Morning News, and other interviews followed in which Hunt proved to be eminently quotable on topics of considerable interest — such as money.

"Money as money is nothing," he said. "It is just something to make bookkeeping convenient."

Efforts to estimate the size of his fortune were unceasing. Seven years ago it was said that he made as much as $1 million a week.

For all his riches, Hunt had a lifestyle that could reasonably be described as austere. Possessing no yachts or private airplanes, maintaining only two homes, sometimes trimming his own hair, he did little to belie the statement he once made: "I don't spend much money. There's nothing I want but what I do, I buy. But I have no inclination to throw money away."

Until recent years, when his health no longer permitted it, he drove himself to work, in a medium-sized auto, which he left several blocks from his downtown Dallas skyscraper to avoid a modest parking fee.

Someone, however, once asked Hunt about his youngest son, Lamar Hunt, who owns the Kansas City Chiefs of the National Football League among his sports interests.

"Mr. Hunt, your son Lamar has lost $1 million a year supporting his professional football team. Doesn't this worry you?"

"Certainly it worries me," Hunt replied. "At that rate he will be broke in 250 years."

FITLER SENDS CHAUFFEUR PACKING

PHILADELPHIA—Rachel Fitler, the 77-year-old millionairess, broke off her engagement to a 29-year-old Welsh chauffeur Friday and police were called to remove him from her estate.

"It's finished," said a member of Miss Fitler's staff. "The engagement is off. The whole thing is over."

The engagement was revealed last month after the chauffeur, Michael Wilson, placed an announcement in a Welsh newspaper. Miss Fitler, an aunt of Happy Rockfeller, confirmed the plans.

But Thursday, after Wilson's return from a trip, she said in a telephone interview she wasn't sure about the marriage.

"I sort of think it's too much for me" she said. "I don't know. We haven't talked about it."

The member of Miss Fitler's staff said Wilson turned up Thursday at the Fitler mansion on the fashionable Main Line.

"We put him out of the house then, and he turned up again today. That's when we called the police," the staff member said.

PRINCE GEORGE—Warren Lloyd Kerr of Prince George has been charged with flying a plane while under the influence of alcohol and had been remanded to Dec. 11 in Provincial court here.

He is also charged with eight violations of flight regulations. The charges were laid as a result of an incident Aug. 27.

KATMANDU, Nepal—Eiko Hisano, leader of the first women's team to attempt to scale Mt. Everest, said Friday women climbers have more endurance than men.

Mrs. Hisano from Nara, Japan, and 14 other women are set to begin scaling the world's highest peak at the end of March. They hope to reach the summit of the 29,028-foot Himalayan mountain by mid-May.

"Women are not as strong as men," Mrs. Hisano said. "However, they can climb longer and have greater endurance than men."

FAYETTEVILLE, N.C.—Sharon Moore, 27, applied for a job last week with the Fayetteville police department. On Friday, she was in jail.

A routine background investigation required of all applicants revealed that she was charges and one grand larceny charge, police wanted in New York City on 12 forgery said.

She was held in the Cumberland County jail under a $20,000 bond pending an extradition hearing.

Fish Stories Surround Miracle Thames Salmon

LONDON — When a large healthy salmon was caught in the intake screen at a power station on The Thames this month there was great rejoicing among officials.

They asked a biologist to examine and confirm it as being a salmon then packed it in ice and called in the press to announce that the River Thames was now clear enough of pollution to satisfy nature's fussiest fish.

But the smiles froze on the faces of the men from the Port of London Authority, Thames Water Authority and Central Electricity Generating Board when up popped an Irishman from Tilbury to say they had all goofed.

All the fulsome editorials about the miracle of The Thames seemed a trifle overripe after the Irishman said he had caught the fish while on holiday in Ireland a year before.

For a year it had lain in his Tilbury deep freeze, upriver from the Gravesend power station, until his wife finally refused to cook it on the grounds that it was too old. He took it out and threw it in the river, shortly before a salmon was found in the power station intake.

"A million pounds worth of publicity down the drain," groand a water authority man when he heard this news.

But it turns out that there is as little substance in the Irishman's explanation of the Gravesend miracle as there is in an Irish mist.

Says Alwyne Wheeler of the British Museum: "He may have thrown a salmon in the river but it wasn't the one found at the power station."

Wheeler is a nationally-respected billogist in the department of zoology at the museum's natural history section. He was the man called in to look at the salmon.

In view of the former reputation of the Thames as one of the filthiest sewers in the world, there was widespread disbelief that the 8½-pound, 30-inch salmon had even been alive when taken from the intake.

"It was alive all right, with its gills moving for half an hour after it was found," said a senior official of the Central Electricity Generating Board.

"There's no question that this was a recently-deceased salmon," says Wheeler. "I examined it six hours after it had been taken and from four distinctive characteristcs was able to identify it.

"If the one I examined had been in an icebox for a year the gills would have been broken and chipped and the body would have been dehydrated. Also, the Irishman threw his fish in the Thames on Friday while this one was found the Tuesday following.

"In four days time it would have been filthy and in pieces after the shrimps and seagulls had had a go at it."

Wheeler says that 75 or 76 different species of fish have been found in the Thames in the last five years, a testament to the more than $100-million spent on battling river pollution by the Greater London Council and Port of London Authority.

The last time a salmon was caught alive in the river was in 1833. After that, the massive growth in London's population caused by the pressures of the industrial revolution sent such a tital wave of urine and excrement into the Thames that the fish fled.

UNITED WAY DRIVE 'BEST RETURN YET'

Proceeds of this year's United Way campaign are expected to be more than $685,000 by the time the final audit is done, Victoria campaign chairman Bob Ostler said today.

The contributions fall slightly short of the target of $698,000, but Ostler said this year's is the most successful campaign in the organization's 37-year history.

"We are pleased with the returns to date, especially in the residential division," Ostler said.

Campaign projections show more returns still to come from almost all campaign divisions.

There are still a number of businesses to be called on, Ostler said, "and I hope that they will be understanding and receptive when the canvasser does call."

Anyone who has not been canvassed and wants to contribute to the United Way can still mail in a donation to the office at 737 Fort Street, or phone 385-6708 and arrange for a canvasser to call.

Victoria is now leading in the campaign challenge with Dartmouth, Nova Scotia, Ostler said.

"We have this opportunity to beat the east coast and I'd really like to see us do it," Ostler said.

He reminded participants in the Walkathon '74 project to turn in their pledge collections.

The United Way supports 23 agencies in the Greater Victoria area. Allotments range from nominal amounts to fledgling organizations to more than $90,000 for large, multi-service organizations like the Red Cross and the YM-YWCA. The George R. Pearkes Clinic for the Handicapped is another major recipient of funds.

Vandalism Strengthens Park Plea

Pioneer grave desecrated.

By PAUL MOSS
Times Staff

This is an elegy to a city cemetery, and a eulogy for the "illustrious", souls buried there.

Ross Bay cemetery, last resting place of statesmen, soldiers and other notable B.C. pioneers, is becoming a target for "violent vandalism," says the British Columbia Historical Association.

"Monuments have been smashed; columns have been knocked over; the capitals of some columns have been removed, and these results are the effect of considerable force and cannot be attributed to weather or the lapse of time," association president K. L. Leeming complains in a letter to Victoria city council.

He suggests measures to deter the vandals, including strong lighting "discreetly placed" in trees and shrubs, and possibly fencing the seaward boundary of the graveyard.

But city parks committee chairman Ald. Malcolm Anderson said Friday it would not be practical to implement such proposals. Fencing is generally abhorrent to city parks policies, he said, and cemetery lights would be subject to more abuse than the gravestones themselves.

Anderson said the aim is to encourage greater use of Ross Bay as a "cemetery-park," and this in itself might prove some deterrent to vandalism.

"I think we do more honor to our dead by creating a living park than fencing it in and putting on lights to keep out the ghouls," he added.

Ross Bay cemetery covers 27.5 acres and costs the city about $40,000 a year to maintain. Only about 40 burials a year now take place there, all of them on family plots bought years ago. There are no new plots available.

Within its grounds, says the association's letter, "lie the remains and stand the memorials to illustrious pioneers of this city and this province."

Says the BCHA: "The disgraceful, wanton misconduct of a few persons distresses and, to some extent, disgraces many. The place which should be honored, preserved and excellently maintained is sadly neglected."

But parks director Cliff Bate says in a report to Anderson's committee, which will consider the matter next week, that considering Ross Bay has more than 10,000 graves the incidence of vandalism is "relatively low."

Bate admits, however, that it does constitute a "continuing problem."

He, too, expresses doubts about the effectiveness of lights, fencing, gates and patrols, and agrees greater public interest in the cemetery might help curb wilful damage.

Bate suggests including $1,000 in the parks budget for 1975 to repair broken gravestones.

Anderson, whose own grandfather and great-grandfather are buried at Ross Bay, said gravestones belonging to families who can no longer be traced should be removed and installed flush in the turf to improve the cemetery's parklike atmosphere.

"It must be viewed as an asset to Victoria; as recreation land paying tribute to our forebears," he said.

Political Domination Forces Lifestyle Of Housing Projects

By PAT DUFOUR
Times Staff

B.C. citizens' control of their own lifestyle took another beating when the provincial government voted itself carte blanche control over what kind of housing it builds on government-owned lands.

The legislation—introduced by the former Social Credit government, cancelled out by this government in 1973 and now reinstated, poses a threat to long-established neighborhoods where the government injects massive housing projects.

And, judging by this week's public hearing in Saanich on the controversial 305-unit Interurban-Marigold housing complex, the quality of life in government housing projects is not the top priority — nor are people.

It's statistics.

A. R. Bain of North Vancouver, vice-president of operations for the government's Dunhill Development Corporation Ltd., told this week's public hearing on the project that the formula used for the 30.6-acre site was 32 persons per acre.

He omitted to explain that because of the placing of the units, in one area at least, that density will rise to more than 60 persons per acre.

Family Life Out

As Terry Webb, supervisor for the provincial department of human resources in that area, pointed out, the lifestyle forced on the 1,500 adults and children expected to be housed in the project would be "far from conducive to reasonable family life."

Nearby residents worry about the safety of their children — and those to be housed in the government project—once the 500 to 600 cars of the new residents and the many service trucks start using the narrow, ditch-lined access roads.

Their concern becomes suspect to the cynical, who see them only as home-owners anxious to hold on to their own way of life, protecting their investment.

But what of those who invest in Dunhill's condominium units?

The land on which the units stand will be leased on a 50-year basis from the government, costs of land acquisition and servicing being included in the lease cost.

A department of housing official spokesman said such housing projects are self-supporting, the tenants pay their way. But no price can buy rapport between those who live in such massive projects and their surrounding neighbours who feel threatened by the newcomers.

Use Not Issue

After this week's hearing, it must be clear to Saanich council that those neighbors are not against the government land being used for homes. To attack a chance for desperate people to buy a home in the current housing crisis is tantamount to making motherhood a crime.

It's yet to be decided by council as a whole, but individual aldermen have already indicated, off-the-record, they would like to see the government project cut down, perhaps halved.

To achieve this, however, it will be necessary for the provincial government to show the benevolence of a 'Big Brother.'

The municipality has no legal whip with which to force the government to take another look at what it proposes to do to the community as a whole.

There is no big stick which council can use to get the government to develop a conscience about the way in which its Dunhill tenants will be forced to live.

Suggestion Killed

Parochialism and a "sticking-to-the-rules" attitude of the government agency has already killed a suggestion by Saanich that could have resulted in a more tolerant acceptance of the complex by the community.

Dunhill proposes to build a small recreation complex on the site, as required by Saanich, to be used, owned and operated by the condominium tenants.

It will not be open to the community and even if it were it would be inadequate. Indeed, if it was used widely by the Dunhill tenants its facilities would be overtaxed.

Saanich proposed to Dunhill that, instead, it should earmark funds for a contribution to a larger recreation centre that would be housed on another site in the Colquitz area and be large enough to meet the demands of the Dunhill residents and their neighbors.

Saanich's request was brushed aside.

Stalling by the provincial government pressure for higher density than the municipality wants, and insistence on development on its own terms, has bogged down Saanich's four-year-old Roy Road project.

Saanich's original concept was to assemble land and sell the lots at cost for single-family homes. The municipality was to be reimbursed by the senior governments in a tri-level agreement.

No Reply

Housing co-ordinator Gil Laurenson says the provincial government never replied to the application for the agreement, made about two years ago.

Laurenson said if the provincial government had co-operated at that time families would now be housed in the Royal Roads development area.

"They changed the name of the game on us," he said. "On the basis of proper planning, that area is right on the fringe of our urban area. We bought the land from the original owners at fantastically low prices on the understanding it would be for single-family homes only. Now the government is insisting on higher density. This puts us in an embarrassing situation."

Laurenson said the political hassle means that people locating there will now have to pay more.

"They're not cheap lots any more," he said. "They would have been about $4,000 at that time but servicing costs have been soaring."

The government's department of housing now wants to build clusters of townhouses, one at least of 29 units, scattered among the single-family units.

A Central Mortgage Housing Corporation said CMHC hoped to be able to provide financing for the units to co-operatives, contractors and homeowners.

Associate deputy minister George Chatterton met with council at an in-camera session Tuesday.

Mayor Ed Lum told the Times the provincial government insists development be carried out on the basis of 20 persons per acre while Saanich, because of limited sewer capacity, wants a 16.4 persons per acre ratio.

This would be 'a more realistic figure" Lum said.

He said Chatterton had had "indicated they will help us with the sewer" but, presumably, Samnich taxpayers will be expected to pick up the rest of the tab.

Others Upset

The question of increasing the sewer capacity will be debated at Monday's council meeting.

Saanich is not the only municipality facing housing hassles with the provincial government. The mayors of Delta and Surrey on the mainland have also spoken out against the political domination.

The provincial government claims 10,000 housing units in the plannnig but records show less than 300 units have been completed in the province.

Stalling and such statistics are cold comfort for the families who live in limbo, waiting for election promises to be fulfilled.

Bus Driver Attacked

By DEREK SIDENIUS
Times Staff

A burly bus driver beat off a knife-wielding attacker Friday night but lost $105 cash he had in his wallet — nonetheless.

Tom McKenzie, 28, a B.C. Hydro bus driver, said he had just stopped at a terminus at Oswego and Niagara in James Bay at 8:20 p.m. when a youth got on, took a seat behind him and said in a soft voice "wait a second, I've got to get my change."

There was no one else on board the bus at the time.

McKenzie gave him $105 he had in his wallet — money he had just taken out of the bank to pay for his mortgage on Monday.

McKenzie refused. "No way, you can get off, but not me."

He said he stood up, turned to meet the youth and a scuffle ensued.

"He looked absolutely petrified. When I grabbed him there was a look of extreme terror on his face."

He said the youth's knife slashed his jacket, more by accident than intent to wound. A stack of timetable cards he had in his pocket prevented the four inch blade from cutting him.

The two fought inside the bus and McKenzie tripped and fell down the stairwell, his head striking the sidewalk, his attacker sprawled on top of him.

He said the knock momentarily stunned him and the youth managed to free himself and run off, the knife in one hand, the money in the other.

Victoria police issued this description of the youth: age between 19 and 20, black, wavy shoulder length hair, black moustache and part beard, 5'10" tall, 150 lbs., wearing an old navy-type ankle length blue coat.

McKenzie received a minor back injury and will be off work for the next few days.

Old Town Plan Poses Dilemma

Developer Hans Hartwig has presented Victoria city council with something of a dilemma in his latest project proposal for which he needs rezoning approval.

The city favors his plan to restore an aged building in the Old Town area, at 546 Yates, but is worried that its proposed use as a liquor store will generate traffic and parking problems.

As Ald. Mike Young noted at Thursday's council meeting, the Application comes at a time when the city is trying to discourage vehicular traffic in that part of the city.

Although the Advisory Planning Commission had recommended approval, council tabled the matter for further study.

In other business, council cleared the way for a public hearing on the proposed Wilderness Park co-operative housing project, on a three-acre site at Summit and Jackson.

The 38-unit scheme, recommended for rezoning by the APC, would provide 15 three-bedroom, 14 two-bedroom and nine one-bedroom units—a total density of 13 to the acre.

School Contracts Under the Wire

Agreements were reached late Friday in Greater Victoria, Saanich, Sooke, Gulf Islands, Lake Cowichan and Cowichan districts.

The six were part of a record number of settlements reached throughout B.C. by the midnight Friday deadline set by Education Minister Eileen Dailly.

A total of 63 of the province's 74 districts settled before the deadline. The rest, including Vancouver, must go to arbitration.

However, a spokesman for the B.C. Teachers' Federation said he expected negotiations to continue in some of the districts over the weekend in an attempt to achieve voluntary settlements, despite expiry of the bargaining deadline.

Exact contract details were not released for the southern Vancouver Island zone but G. R. Kirby of the B.C. Teachers' Federation said salary increases are just over 16 per cent.

Details of the settlements will be released next week after both teachers and school trustees ratify the agreements.

Government legislation Nov. 7 broke an impasse between teachers and trustees over the move by 68 school boards to introduce province-wide bargaining this year. Teachers insisted on retaining local bargaining, and a compromise was reached of zonal bargaining. The province was divided in 17 zones for purposes of contact negotiations.

Claude Hopper Off to Toronto

Claude, and his creator Barry Caviness of Victoria, are grateful to the scores of people who took the time to write or phone their support of his continuing appearance in the paper.

The letters and phone calls were four to one in Claude's favor.

We hope Times readers will be seeing him again as soon as his comic strip syndication is confirmed.

Auction A First For B.C.

An auction of oriental furnishings at the Empress Hotel Wednesday will be the first opportunity for collectors of objets d'art in B.C.—and possibly in Canada—to purchase from a wide variety of items originating in the People's Republic of China.

Hugh Lyle, of Maynard's Auctioneers Ltd., said Friday the hundreds of items in the consignment have been stored for years, and released for sale by auction "after lengthy and complex negotiations."

"The buyer has been working on contacts for years. I can't say too much about him, but he has made many trips over to China," Lyle said.

Said Lyle: "There are some pieces you just won't see the likes of."

Also to be auctioned Wednesday—there will be two separate sessions starting at 1:30 and 7:30 p.m.—is a private collection of oriental pieces, some going back to the Sung Dynasty (960-1279). Included are fine Japanese lacquered items and ivory netsuke.

Lyle said in all there will be 518 lots with more than 1,000 pieces in the auction of oriental art. Total value of the collection is close to $250,000, he said.

First session in Maynard's Christmas auction, starting Monday at 7:30 p.m., will feature early Canadian pine furniture, lamps, silver and plated items, paintings by Canadian artists, rugs, pressed glass, crystal and china.

The second session, 7:30 p.m. Tuesday, will offer Georgian and Victorian furniture, fine silver by makers such as Paul Storr, William Eaton and Hester Bateman, Belgian crystal, china, and paintings by European and English painters.

A preview of all items in the four sessions will be held Sunday from 7:30 to 10:30 p.m., and Monday from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m.

But Even Progress Has Its Price Tag

WE WERE SLOSHING along the home beach in rubber boots, and rain suits this morning when my partner on the daily prowl came up with an observation.

"I'm wondering if we should paint the walls," she said, stepping over a windrow of kelp laced with a tangle of salmon line, "or go ahead with that wallpaper we were looking at."

"You mean the one with the stripes?" I asked. A length of almost-new cedar four-by-four was bobbing at the tide's edge, but we passed it with scarce a glance.

"No," Win said. "It's nice, but it wouldn't go with the new curtains."

"That reminds me," I told her: "The carpenter may turn up early. We'd better head back."

We reversed course, ignoring a moon-snail shell with only a couple of chips out of its rim, and hurried back to the house.

Where the beach merges with the foreshore tangle of gale-deposited drift and autumn-withered wild pea vines, my dear one paused. We eyed the plain-jane abode which has sheltered us for two years plus.

"You know," Win said, "I hate our old curtains. They're nothing but a bundle of rags. Only when we get the new ones up, there won't be a split we can reach through to open the window."

"Or to look at the weather," I said.

It occurred to me as we shed our boots on the back steps that we were going to miss that handy, yard-long tear in those curtains.

"I guess it's the price of progress," Win said. Her voice sounded the least bit bleak.

I knew what she meant. There's no gain without its loss, and even the modest refurbishing we had embarked on would leave its mark on our way of life.

We did not come to this well-populated strip of Up-Island shoreline as pioneers. But we did have our own pioneering phase, and it was a lot of fun.

As a couple re-committed to a freelance existence after 10 years in other pastures, we operated on a budget so tiny that the least unscheduled expense could and frequently did leave us counting pennies.

I fished for the pot. We dug clams and gathered oysters, picked berries and learned that young mettle leaves make better greens than spinach.

Win baked her own bread. We achieved a garden of sorts, and rejoiced in the scrooty vegetables that struggled for a foothold among its rocks.

Each day was an adventure in making-do, and what we couldn't afford, we added to our someday list.

Someday we would do something about those ratty old curtains. Meanwhile, there lay the beach — and who could say what the tide might have delivered to our doorstep?

In those days, we wouldn't have been so absorbed in home improvement as to pass up a useful chunk of four-by-four or a strand of line that might lead to a fishing lure snagged in a kelp stem.

Each morning, no matter what the weather, we prefaced the day's work with a spell of beachcombing. We scavenged like seagulls, and the sea was kind to us.

It sent us lengths of end-frayed rope in various colors and thicknesses. Most of the salmon plugs in our tackle boxes are gifts of the salt-chuck. The hard hat riding a wave crest like a little orange boat cost me no more than a boot full of water. The daily grab-bag might yield an abalone shell or a net sack of perfectly sound cooking onions. When Win needed a plank for a shelf, the next tide came through with one pre-shaped to her exact requirements.

We weren't living off the land. Even the sure-enough pioneers of long ago couldn't quite accomplish that. Still, we acquired a fine feeling of self-sufficiency.

By degrees our situation changed. We made a buck here and another there. This shift in our fortunes was by no means spectacular. But if the eagle didn't scream, at least its occasional croak took on a healthier note.

Then one day as I was poling my head through the split in the dining-room curtain to check on the weather, Win, our business manager, made a pronouncement.

"I think we can do something about this room at last," she said.

Since then, life has posed one problem after another. Green curtains or gold? Dry-wall or panelling? Wall-to-wall carpet or an area rug?

So to this morning, when we tramped a quarter-mile of beach with hardly a thought for wind and weather, sky and sea.

The realization jolted me.

"The dining room fix-up will leave us pretty broke," I said. The thought brought no dismay.

"We can always eat clam chowder," Win said cheerfully. She pulled on her beach boots. "I thought I'd just go see what's on the end of that salmon line."

The four-by-four was gone, reclaimed by the tide. But we found a $5 salmon plug in the kelp bundle, not a scratch on it, and the hooks barely rusted.

CMA URGES FORUM TO AVOID COLLAPSE

MONTREAL (CP) — Walter R. Lawson, president of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, this week urged government, business, labor, farmers and consumers to unite in a forum on national income to avoid economic dislocation and collapse.

In an address to the association's Quebec division, he said: "I believe the free forces of the market in these matters have become so distorted in recent years, particularly as regards the collective bargaining process, that I fear for the dislocation and collapse of the system."

He said the proposed forum should have consultative but not regulatory powers in establishing national guidelines for wages and profits.

The only alternative to changing the pattern of collective bargaining is bureaucratic government control of wages and prices, he said.

He said the collective bargaining process is no longer serving the community because unions are too strong for the forces opposing them.

The system of custom and law governing unions and the collective bargaining process would have to change unless Canadians wanted more maldistribution of national income, he said.

"Pay increases are valueless unless in aggregate they represent an increase in the national output of goods and services," he said. "We have all been happily grabbing the money and acting like spoiled kids when we discover the money isn't worth as much as it used to be."

When annual wage and salary increases exceed three per cent they outpace the rise in national productivity and push up prices, he said.

He cited recent high pay settlements for Great Lakes deck officers and West Coast grain handlers as potentially very disruptive for the economy if they became the norm.

Higher annual wage increases for Canadian workers over more than a decade had gradually eliminated the wage differential with the United States and consequently eroded Canada's competitive advantage over U.S. industry.

Organized labor had a stake in avoiding the bureaucratization of government-imposed wage and price controls and in preserving the competitive enterprise system which had enabled the average factory worker to lead the good life.

Fertile Areas for Tax Savings

YOUR TAXES

By I. H. ASPER

Regardless of what effect last Monday's Budget may have on the broad economy, it is certain to create considerable work for one sector: the tax planning and consulting services field.

Aside from approximately 150 technical amendments to the income tax system, some of which are of major substance, there are several changes which suggest that many Canadians should reorganize their affairs so as to enjoy the beneffits offered.

The most fertile area for planning is the amendment which allows each individual the right to earn up to $1,000 per year of investment income tax free. For the 1974 year, the only investments which qualify are interest bearing securities of banks, trust companies, mortgages, bonds, and the like.

But for the 1975 year, dividends from taxable Canadian companies will also receive the tax free treatment. In all cases, the interest or dividend must be paid by someone with whom the taxpayer deals at arm's length. Thus, dividends from the family business, or interest on most shareholder loans to family companies won't qualify.

It then pays the private business operator to have his company borrow, say, $10,000 from its banker, repay his shareholder loan, or pay him a dividend, and personally invest the money in tax free interest earning securities. The interest his company pays on the borrowed money is deductible while the interest he earns personally is tax free.

Since the courts have ruled that a father can loan money interest free, to his wife and children, provided the money is repayable on demand, family investment portfolios might be reorganized to improve the group's protection against erosion of the value of the unit's savings.

If the father has an investment portfolio of $50,000 earning interest at 10 per cent, he would earn $5,000, of which $1,000 is tax free and $4,000 is taxable. If, instead, he kept only $10,000 and loaned $10,000 to each of his wife and three children, and they invested at 10 per cent, the entire $5,000 of interest would be tax free.

The budget also offers tax planning incentives for those who are willing to save money through Registered Retirement Savings Plans. A husband will now have the right to contribute to an RRSP for his non-working spouse, and claim the tax deduction. If he is self-employed, he has the right to deduct 20 per cent of his income up to $4,000 maximum.

If he is employed, the limit is $2,500 less any contribution he makes to his employer's pension plan. To the extent that he doesn't use his maximum contribution, he can contribute the difference to a plan for his wife.

This will provide substantial income tax benefits each year, as well as provide potential death tax saving at the end of the road. Taxpayers have until the end of February of 1975 to make contributions which will be deductible against their 1974 income.

And still in the pension area, some taxpayers may want to supplement their income by taking partial pensions in advance of full retirement. If they do, the first $1,000 of pension payment from an employer's fund will now be tax free. Employee associations would do well to review their employer's pension plan to make certain it permits this, once the final form of the new legislation is established.

Another tax saving device arising from the budget is the Registered Education Plan. When an individual contributes money to an accepted plan which is aimed at paying his child's costs of post secondary education, whether at university or technical school, the income earned on these savings will not be taxable in the hands of the contributor but will only be taxed in the hands of his beneficiary, normally his child, when the money is paid to him.

Because the student will likely have little income while he's at school, his tax rate would normally be negligible. This legislation will provide a major boost to non-profit organizations such as Canadian Scholarship Trust which has for years been promoting a savings plan for parents who want to guarantee the financing of their children's post secondary training.

As well, owners of small businesses may wish to review their salary structures and capital cost deductions for the current and subsequent years. The amount they can earn at the low corporate tax rate of 25 per cent has been raised from $50,000 to $100,000 until they have accumulated $500,000 of low-rate earnings.

In some cases they may be well-advised to take steps to show increased earnings and save discretionary expense claims for future years when they are in the 50 per cent bracket.

These are but a few of the tax planning questions the Budget raises. Others, such as the Registered Home Ownership Savings Plan and the right to offset once's income from all sources against capital cost claims from newly built multiple family residential real estate, offer interesting opportunities which should be studied in greater depth.

'Live' Dolls Feel Food Pinch

By ELEANOR BOYLE
Times Staff

Could a doll have its own food shortage?

It's just one of the problems Christmas shoppers face when they buy toys requiring "extras."

Baby Alive is one of the fastest sellers in Victoria stores during early Christmas sales, but costs continue for food after an initial outlay of about $19 for the doll itself.

The special food necessary is hard to get after the new year, as one mother said. "The supplies just dry up."

One store spokesman said no food is sold, besides the packages in the box, and doll owners must write directly to the manufacturer when supplies run out.

Baby Alive, who eats, drinks, feels soft like a real baby and even soils her diapers, should not be fed roast beef or any other people-food, according to the manufacturer.

Whether rickets would develop without the special food has yet to be determined.

Fads have prompted new twists in some of last year's model toys.

"G.I. Joes were here last year but now have a Kung Fu grip," said a Toys and Wheels shop employee.

And models of recreational vehicles such as the Big Jim Sports Camper are almost as popular among kids as the real ones were with parents this summer.

One mother at a Simpsons Sears toy counter had her son alongside and asked for one toy after another as he whispered them in her ear.

All items asked for were advertised, on television including stunt cycles and "ricochet racers."

"One item that's really moving out," said a department store salesman, "is for older kids."

"It's a Playboy Playmate Puzzle, selling for $4, $5 and $10, up to a lifesize 5 feet 6 inches once fitted together.

Stuffed toys are popular and craft shops are selling handmade cloth pillows, dolls, pyjama bags and puppets this year.

Simple, well-made wooden toys are available in both craft and specialty shops.

Equal Pensions

EDMONTON (CP)—Female Alberta teachers who retired before 1970 will have their pensions equalized with their male counterparts, education minister Lou Hyndman says.

The teachers were given reduced annual pensions because of a longer life expectancy, he said. In 1971 standard pensions were given both men and women.

—Bill Halkett photos

STORES BRACED FOR RIP-OFFS

As parents know, children can rip off Christmas wrappings and have gifts all over the living room floor within five minutes.

Department store managers know it too, so many toys are put in boxes wrapped in tight, heat-sealed plastic and hard-to-open casings so youngsters don't go on unwrapping binges right in the store.

Once the item is paid for and out of the store the kids can do what they like — though parents may be stuck with a product that's often not all they thought it was.

Unless samples are on display, Christmas shoppers must believe the words and pictures on the box to know what's inside.

No law compels toy manufacturers to label boxes with specific content information, but the provincial consumer services department is now taking action against deceptive practices of all kinds.

Department officers, now on Fort St., said this week they welcome complaints about Christmas toys and gifts.

"If they break half-an-hour after you buy them and the store or manufacturer refuses to replace them, we'll step in and try to help," said one officer.

Provincial consumer services director Michael Hanson says consumer complaints do not increase drastically at Christmastime as most people would expect, because most stores assume proper responsibility.

"It seems the marketplace is more effective than we give it credit for," he said.

Victoria's major department hire no extra staff to handle complaints during Christmas buying, but do their best to handle it internally.

One consumer services officer said the department may in future get into the position of recommending certain toys over others around Christmastime.

Alarmed Doctors Seek Gov't Pollution Research

By PETER MICHAELSON

OTTAWA (CP) — Some medical experts are becoming increasingly alarmed about the formation of toxic air pollutants in cities, and want more government involvement in air pollution research.

Scientists are finding that even low air pollution levels may cause more serious adverse health effects than was previously though, says Dr. David Pengelly, a respiratory physiologist at McMaster University.

Experiments at McMaster and at McGill University have shown that exposure to ozone and sulphur dioxide, singly or in combination, has immediate adverse effects on healthy young subjects.

Dr. Milan Hazucha, a McGill physiologist, says the the long term effects are not known.

At pollution levels frequently encountered in cities, his test subjects reported discomfort and many began to cough. A few developed pharngitis, an inflammation of the mucous membrane, and others reported a slight soreness of the larger airways.

Not all of Dr. Hazucha's 80 volunteer subjects were affected to the same extent, but none was immune.

ASKS FOR RESEARCH

On the basis of these and other findings, Dr. David Bates, dean of medicine at the University of British Columbia, has appealed to governments for greater research involvement.

He says in the Canadian Medical Association Journal that levels of oxides of nitrogen are increasing, and the federal air sampling network does not regularly report on levels of these gases in cities.

Attempts to contend with one pollution problem often create another.

Recent pollution-control measures taken to reduce carbon monoxide and sulphur dioxide emissions—by switching to natural gas from coal in power plants—has resulted in the production of more oxides of nitrogen, says Dr. Pengelly.

This generates chemical reactions in the atmosphere which produce more harmful substances, particularly ozone, a gas produced by the action of sunlight on hydrocarbons and nitrogen oxides.

Dr. Bates says the findings of high nitrogen oxide levels by some provincial environment departments is alarming, and it now is urgent that all major metropolitan areas have more efficient pollution-monitor systems.

STUDIES NOT MADE

Describing present government efforts as "grossly inadequate," he says there was no well-organized attempt to determine whether high levels of nitrogen oxides during a two month period in Edmonton resulted in increased hospital admissions.

Dr. Pengelly says that in addition to major cities, smaller communities and even rural areas are detecting higher ozone levels.

Scientists in the United States have found ozone clouds drifting over rural areas, apparently formed downwind from electric power plants. Ozone in the lower atmosphere can be damaging to agriculture as well as to human lungs.

Unfortunately, while ozone apparently is increasing in the lower atmosphere, there is evidence that man is destroying the protective ozone layer in the upper atmosphere, largely through the production of chlorofluoromethanes used as propellants in aerosol cans.

Too little ozone in the upper atmosphere will allow cancer-causing ultraviolet light to penetrate the earth's protective envelope with greater intensity, scientists say.

Unfortunately, the atmosphere does not mix in the right way to redistribute the ozone, and the earth's surface may suffer the deleterious effects of both conditions.

India Adopts 'Nazi' Tactic

NEW DELHI (WP) — A presidential order that deprives alleged smugglers and racketeers of their constitutional rights has raised a political and legal furor here and made many ordinary Indians nervous.

Under the new order, the government is free to arrest anyone suspected of smuggling, illegal foreign-exchange dealing and similar crimes and hold them in prison indefinitely without allowing them access to the courts.

"This is the closest thing to Nazi Germany I've aver heard of," said the wife of a New Delhi businessman. "Now they are perfectly free to barge into our homes in the middle of the night and drag anyone off to jail. All they have to do is label you a smuggler."

President Fakhruddin Ali Ahmed issued the order last weekend at the behest of Prime Minister Indira Gandhi, who forced the order through despite the outraged objections of all opposition parties.

The opposition, from the rightist Hindu Jana Sangh Party to the Communists, displayed rare unity against the order, which has been labeled "authoritarian," an act of "naked dictatorship" and "fascistic."

Legal sources said the order may not even be constitutional. The government enacted it under a national emergency act in effect since the Bangladesh war on December 1971.

Some lawyers point out that the emergency regulations only give the government extraordinary powers to deal with threats to national security. Smugglers and foreign exchange racketeers, they argue, do not constitute that kind of threat. The presidential decree is to remain in effect for six months unless the emergency is lifted earlier.

The order has already run into stormy legal waters as judges fight to maintain the powers of the courts. In the New Delhi high court Wednesday, judges ordered release of two men being held as alleged gold smugglers. The court termed the order "invalid."

The government took the step as part of an intensive campaign against organized criminals said to be depriving India of more than $6 billion a year. Since the campaign began two months ago, 529 alleged smugglers and exchange racketeers have reportedly been arrested.

However, in the last few weeks, courts in various parts of India released 20 of these people, saying evidence against them was grossly inadequate.

Frustrated by these decisions, Mrs. Gandhi apparently decided to override the courts by depriving suspects of access to the legal system.

The government has tried to assure opposition politicians and the public that the presidential order will be used only against smugglers and other racketeers. This assurance has failed to calm suspicions that the government is now free to arrest and hold not just criminals, but anyone whose freedom it finds inconvenient.

Concern is heightened by the fact that the state and district governments may exercise the order as well as the central government. Critics say that the ruling Congress Party will thus be able to stage a witch hunt at all levels against its political enemies.

Responding to all this hostility, Mrs. Gandhi and her cabinet decided last week to convert this presidential order into a legal bill.

Opposition members have offered motions against the order in both houses of parliament. No date has been fixed for the debate. Tempers have flared in the lower house where a Socialist member has demanded to know why the government does not act against officials and ministers allegedly linked to smugglers.

About Ruffled Egos And Lovin' Mothers

'Twas about a month before Christmas and so much for all the nice things Times people have been writing about other people. Because, really, it's not always a piece of cake, this job, even though nobody here is going to pretend that all he does is sweat over a hot typewriter from morn 'til night.

No way, for besides not leaving any time to be temperamental, there's always the chance you'll get a Vic High mother screaming on the blower that Mount Doug is getting all the headlines, or you'll get a Spectrum official complaining from the other side of town that you haven't put his school's basketball results in the paper. It doesn't matter that he read the wrong paper, got the wrong guy, or that somebody in his very own administration probably goofed up in the first place. No, it's shoot first, and if the bullets find a mark, fine.

The same goes for every ever-lovin' mother from tidlets to grannies. Little Johnny is the best there is and, if he isn't, can Susie ever run the 100-yard dash, and why wasn't her name in the results, either? So Sosie trips and falls flat on her reputation and the bad track isn't even mentioned. But Mount Doug wins another one and that's why they get the headlines and Vic High had better smarten up because they've got a big anniversary coming up in '76 and their image needs an upgrading. So there!

Minor football coaches, I'm told, fall in a special category. They're mostly sugar and spice before the game, because they want that ink, man; but try and find them after a losing venture. So they're typical and if not everyone belongs to the why-should-I-bother-club ask the night man. He keeps a complete list. Well, he did. Now he's calling the girls' field hockey coaches instead. Because they're coming along. It used to be tough to get details from them; but they asked and learned.

But watch it! Next year there may be someone else in charge and the liaison will be shot again. And maybe all over town too.

It won't—in any sport? Don't tell me, tell the night man or keep quiet. Because there are exceptions. Take minor soccer, schedule and results. Right on time every week. Complete co-operation. They're No. 1 and have been since the days of Don Gray. Little League, too, usually has everything on the ball and in good time.

But what's going to happen in '75 with girls in the league, and little league mothers as chaperones or maybe coaches yet?

Then there's the horse race fan. You've never dealt with one, eh? Well, as most people know, the Times carries race entries for the Vancouver Exhibition Park season. This is because several Island people own horses and, after all, isn't everyone interested in the sport of kings? And nobody, but nobody, used those entries to take a flutter through the books, do they? No, they "know somebody who is going to the track tomorrow. . . ."

Well, you know . . . and I know . . .

And just omit a horse from the overnights, and it wins . . . Lordy be! That's when the catcalls come. "I've been waiting for that horse . . . you always do this . . . I'm going to cancel the paper . . ." It doesn't matter either if the horse's name was never sent.

So, some days you can't win or even run second.

But I guess every organization has its problems. The big trouble is that they don't share them with others. Everyone knows that often much more can be accomplished through co-operation and understanding beforehand than harsh words after the filly has run down the road. But that's too simple.

And gee, I almost forgot. One more group deserves mention.

Figure-skating mothers. They are the queens of the ruffled-ego set. Just dare leave out little Hilda's name from the list of those who have passed their tests, and look out! Then answer "yes" every four minutes and hang up after 20.

Better still, next time phone our own Ernie Fedoruk. No, he's not the night man. He's our very own ruffled skating father in charge of ruffled mothers.

So we've got all the answers; and humbug to you, too.

Hoop Vikings Tied for Top

By JIM CREGAR
Times Staff

Had you suggested before the start of the Canada West University men's basketball season that UVic Vikings would be sharing first place after five games, even coach Gary Taylor would have raised an eyebrow.

But that's where they are after a 43-35 victory Friday night over University of British Columbia Thunderbirds before an overflow crowd of about 600 at UVic Gym.

A superlative defensive effort and ball control did it. Vikings kept the ball for long stretches in the second half, taking advantage of the fact that men's college basketball in Canada has not yet adopted international rules. Otherwise, they'd have had to shoot 30 seconds after gaining possession.

UVic Vikettes and Jayvees produced more excitement than Vikings in preliminary games Friday but both lost. Vikettes dropped a 51-48 decision to UBC Thunderettes after a five-minute overtime period and Jayvees lost 50-48 to their UBC counterparts on a pair of last-minute foul shots.

In other men's games Friday, Alberta downed Saskatchewan Huskies 85-62 and Lethbridge Pronghorns beat Calgary Dinosaurs 96-82. The results leave UVic, UBC and Alberta with 3-2 won-lost marks while Saskatchewan, Calgary and Lethbridge are all 2-3.

Vikettes' loss, their first of the season, dropped them to third place in the Canada West women's standings with a 4-1 record. Saskatchewan Huskiettes downed Alberta Pandas 52-49 Friday to move into a first-place tie with the Thunderettes. Both schools are unbeaten in five starts. Lethbridge, meanwhile, downed Calgary Dinnies 68-58 and are fourth at 1-4. Alberta and Calgary are 0-5.

Taylor admitted ball possession will become an extinct weapon.

"Our national team plays international rules and most of our nationals come from the universities, so it doesn't make much sense not to have the same rules," he said. "The change may come next year but I'll say this, when it does it will take a lot of the coaching out of the game."

Both teams came out cold in the shooting department and UVic led 24-19 at the half.

Fine floor work by Robbie Parris and some solid rebounding by Bert Zethoff and Dave Mulcahy (eight each) highlighted the UVic performance. Lee Edmondson with 16 points paced the winners while Steve Pettifer had 19 for UBC.

Vikettes wiped out a six-point deficit in the last two minutes when Lorna McHattie, the game's top scorer with 19 points, sank two field goals and fed Edna Ritchie for the tying basket with 33 seconds left. But Thunderettes outscored UVic 8-5 in the extra period.

DOUG PEDEN — EDITOR

Even Winning Cougars Subject to a Change

The Cougars have won their last 11 Western Canada Hockey League games but Ginnell isn't above making changes with a view to making it 12 straight tonight.

There was a slight shuffle among the forwards Friday as the Cougars prepared for tonight's Memorial Arena meeting with Lethbridge Broncos.

A hectic round of activity didn't jeopardize Cougars' hold on first place in the Western Division, but Medicine Hat Tigers and Kamloops Chiefs both moved two points closer to the Cougars.

Tigers exploded for three goals late in the second period at Edmonton as they went on to defeat the struggling Oil Kings, 6-1.

Chiefs, who tackle the Cougars at Memorial Arena on Sunday, kept pace with the Tigers by scoring three goals in the final six minutes to beat Lethbridge 5-3 at Kamloops. The Chiefs and the Tigers share second place with 29 points each, 11 behind the Cougars.

In other action Friday, Saskatoon Blades and Brandon Wheat Kings struggled to a 3-3 tie, Regina Pats downed Calgary Centennials 4-2 and Flin Flon Bombers moved to within three points of fifth-place Winnipeg in the Eastern Division by beating the visiting Clubs 5-3 in a game which saw the Bombers take five of nine majors and two of three game misconducts.

Vikings Share Lead After Nipping Boxers

Vikings moved into a first-place tie with London Boxing Club by beating the Boxers 7-6. Both teams now have eight points but the Boxers have a game in hand.

Dabe Killick and Randy Krantz each potted two goals to lead the Vikings. Rick Piechotta, Tom Penney and Doug Carta added the other UVic markers.

Brian Hamilton and Ross Swanton each scored three times for the Boxers, who held a 4-1 lead after the second period.

IT ISN'T A DAY FOR A SCORPION

On Nov. 23 next year, don't be surprised if Chris Hall stays in bed all day. It's the safest place.

Hall will miss tonight's exhibition game between Victoria Scorpions of the Dogwood Senior "A" Baketball League and Vancouver City College, starting at 6 at Central Junior High School.

He dislocated a shoulder Nov. 23, exactly one year to the day he suffered the same injury last season. Scorpions have ordered Hall to take a week's rest. He'll require an operation but may resume playing until he can get admittance to a hospital.

Scorpions, meanwhile resume league play next weekend with a doubleheader in Vancouver against North Shore Mountaineers.

Flames' Myre Burns Rangers

By The Canadian Press

Atlanta coach Bernie Geoffrion says goalie Phil Myre deserves most of the credit for a Friday night win that moved the Flames into a first-place tie in the National Hockey League's Patrick Division.

Myre blocked 36 shots, including 20 in the third period, as the Flames downed New York Rangers 3-2 to move into a tie with Philadelphia Flyers, who have two games in hand.

"He was outstanding, especially in the third period," Geoffrion said of Myre. "Phil saved us."

With a minute to play and the score 3-2, New York goalie Ed Giacomin left the ice in favor of a sixth attacker, but Myre held the Rangers at bay.

"In the last five minutes, it seemed like they had the puck all the time," said Myre.

The Flames took a 1-0 lead on Jacques Richard's goal mid-way in the second peqriod and made it 2-0 when Keith McCreary scored a short-handed goal later in the period. The Rangers dropped into last place in their division, one point behind New York Islanders, when the Islanders tied California Golden Seals 3-3 in Friday's only other NHL game.

Hrechkosy's sixth goal of the season and second of the night gave California 3-2 lead at 12:20 of the third period, but Bob Nystrom scored less than three minutes later to tie the game.

Angry Floridans Conquer 'Setup'

MEMPHIS (AP) — Florida Blazers won a berth in the World Bowl and crossed up the World Football League establishment Friday night by making good on their promise to vent their financial frustrations on Memphis Southmen.

The Blazers' 18-15 victory before a crowd of only 9,692, which turned on a fumble recovery and Richard James' four-yard touchdown run with 1:13 left to play, lifted them into next Thursday night's championship game against the Americans in Birmingham.

"We beat Memphis, the World Football League and their money," said linebacker Larry Ely of the Blazers, who have been playing without pay for 13 weeks.

Rookie quarterback Buddy Palazzo said the Blazers felt the playoff format gave the advantage to Birmingham championship game against league's winningest and possi- and Memphis, which is the bly most financially stable

Memphis and Birmingham, who finished 1-2 in the Central Division, drew first-round play-off byes while Eastern Division champion Florida had to defeat Philadelphia to advance to Friday night's semi-final game.

"The team voted whether we wanted to play because it was a setup for Memphis," Palazzo said. "We decided to play even if we had to eat crackers."

"We got mad about that," said the WFL's leading rusher, Tommy Reamon, about the format. "We'll be ready for Birmingham, too. We knew we could do it and we did it."

Florida had to overcome a 15-0 halftime deficit after the Southmen scored in the first quarter on J. J. Jennings' one-yard run and quarterback John Huarte's 45-yard pass play to wide receiver Ed Marshall.

With Palazzo in the game for starter Bob Davis, who suffered a rib injury in the second quarter, the Blazers scored in the third periiod on Dave Strock's 25-yard field goal and Reamon's 21-yard dash.

Memphis was hanging onto its 15-11 lead when Dave Thomas fumbled a punt late in the fourth period and Florida's Luther Palmer fell on it at the Southmen 22, setting up James' run.

Cruyff Returning

It Was a Comeback to Remember

NORTH BERGEN, N.J. (UPI) — James J. Braddock, the one-time "Cinderella Man" whose defeat of Max Baer for the title in 1935 still ranks as the greatest upset in heavyweight championship history, died Friday of natural causes. He was 68.

Braddock, the last of the Irish heavyweight champs and a member of boxing's hall of fame, had 85 professional bouts during his 17-year career, winning 51 including 26 by knockout. A 10-1 underdog when he decisioned Baer for the heavyweight title on June 13, 1935, Braddock lost his tilte to Joe Louis by a knockout on June 22, 1937.

He is survived by his wife, Mae, four brothers, two sisters, three children and six grandchildren. Funeral services will be held Tuesday.

Born on Dec. 6, 1905, in New York city of Irish-American parents, Braddock's rise to the heavyweight championship is regarded as one of the most dramatic comeback stories in modern ring annals. A promising young light-heavyweight who had lost to Tommy Loughran for the light-heavy title, his career was almost ruined in 1933 when he broke his hand in a bout with Abe Feldman.

Rich purses that he had invested in the stock market and which had enabled him to buy a taxicab company were eaten up by the depression, and unable to support himself, he was forced to go on relief and apply for charity. He became "Case 2796" and was allotted $17 a week.

It was in June of 1934 while he was working on the railroad loading ties that his old manager, Joe Gould, came to his rescue. Once convinced that Braddock's hand had healed properly, Gould got him a fight that was to launch his ring comeback.

The fight was against a highly-touted heavyweight named Corn Griffin, and Braddock gave Griffin such a beating that the fight was stopped in the third round. Next came a 10-round decision over John Henry Lewis at Madison Square Garden and then Braddock registered another stunning upset by defeating top-ranking heavyweight contender Art Lasky on March 22, 1935.

Braddock finally got his big chance at the Garden Bowl on Long Island City on June 13, 1935, when he was matched against Max Baer for the title. Baer, 26, was considered a far superior talent in terms of size and ability, but Braddock, then 29, outdecisioned Baer in 15 rounds to win the title.

The victory earned Braddock the nickname "Cinderella Man," and it proclaimed his ability to lift himself from relief to royalty in less than a year.

City Rinks on Top of Totem

Jack Trueman's Victoria Club entry, which included Harvey Hodge, Ron Bowes and Greg Smith, won the "C" event and, more important, became the first rink to qualify for the Pacific Coast Curling Association men's final playdowns.

Playland's Ray Benwell was back in Vancouver today to bid for the second qualifying spot. Benwell, supported by Don Dyck, Del Batters and Brian McKay, won the "B" event and wound up with a 6-1, won-lost record.

The rinks with the best two records, if you'll remember, come out of the Totem to qualify for the PCCA final. Benwell and his mates tied Monte Olson of Cloverdale, and the two rinks were to play off today in a sudden-death match to determine the second qualifier.

A third Victoria rink, the Racquet Club foursome skipped by Steve Skillings just missed the playoff spot when they lost to Vancouver's Gene Kraus in the "F" event final. Skillings, Murray Walker, Kim Browning and Bill Okell carried a 9-1 record into the "F" final.

But while the Trueman, Skillings and Benwell rinks came up with glory, Playland's Bob Callaugher managed to come away with great respect.

THE CURLING SCENE

By Ernie Fedoruk

Gallaugher finished third in the primary Totem event with a 5-1 record. Same crew wound up with the runnerup prize after losing the Playland cashspiel final to Victoria's Gary Liebel.

Some of the province's top skips are extremely impressed with Gallaugher. They figure he has the potential to become recognized as "the best skip" on Vancouver Island.

Gallaugher always could shoot. But, until recent years, he lacked exposure. That means rubbing shoulders and matching strategy with the Hec Gervais, the Ron Northcotts, the Bernie Sparkes et al.

Exposure has been achieved.

His strategy is very aggressive and highly developed.

They were talking behind his back at the Totem, but it was the kind of conversation that brings blushes, not burns. And it was nice to hear.

Still with the high-level competition, it's "90 per cent certain" that an Edmonton television station will stage a "world series" of curling in the Alberta capital shortly.

In addition to a top prize of $20,000, rinks also will be paid $100 for each game they win in the double-knockout event.

The eight rinks being invited are all former world champions. Among them, Lyall Dagg, Ernie Richardson, Northcott, Gervais, Orest Meleschuk, Bud Sommerville, Don Duguid, Chuck Hay of Scotland and Sweden's Jan Ullsten.

Jim Armstrong, still a native Victorian but studying on the mainland, plans to be home for the holidays. With a cast.

The celebrated wrist that troubled him in the Brier playdowns two years ago has been acting up again. Armstrong said Friday he has scheduled an operating date just before Christmas but "should be ready to curl again by Jan. 1."

The trouble, it seems, is a large scar. In lay language, the scar pinches some nerves, and everytime it does, it causes Armstrong considerable discomfort.

Do-it Yourself TIPS

TAPE "CLAMP" MENDS CHINAWARE — instead of mending one piece at a time when repairing broken china, the whole mending job can be done at once when cellulose tape is used to hold each piece in place while the cement dries. It is best to fit all the pieces together first, using the tape only. In this way the job can be done more quickly and, since all the cementing is done at one time, the risk of having a last piece that does not fit is avoided.

Blazers May Think Andy Is Too Handy

By The Canadian Press

Andy Bathgate has said his comeback as a player is only temporary, but Vancouver Blazers may not let him quit.

The Blazers, who won only three of 14 games without Bathgate, won their third in a row with him in the lineup, defeating New England Whalers 6-2 in a World Hockey Association game.

The Whalers, who lead the WHA's East Division and had only three other losses, managed only 26 shots on Vancover's Don McLeod, who blanked New England after the first period.

Bathgate, assistant to coach Joe Crozier, decided to play to help bring some discipline to a young team and to help solve a manpower shortage.

When he played Tuesday night, it was his first game in three years. He last played in Switzerland.

Rookie Ron Chipperfield scored twice for the Blazers. Mike Pelyk, Danny Lawson and John McKenzie were the other Vancouver scorers.

The victory moved the last-place Blazers to within one point of fourth-place Edmonton Oilers in the Canadian Division, snapping a five-game road-win streak by the Whalers.

In Friday's other WHA games, Winnipeg Jets edged Michigan Stags 7-6, Cleveland Crusaders beat Indianapolis Racers 4-2, and Toronto Toros tied Phoenix Roadrunners 4-4.

Bobby Hull had the seventh four-goal game of his career for Winnipeg, bringing his season's goal total to a league-leading 23. Hull holds the WHA record for the most games with three or more goals with 11.

BOWLER OF WEEK

No stranger on prize-winners' dias in bowling is Marlene Mitchell. Past winner made it again in eighth week of 12th annual Times' Bowler-of-the-Week competition with impressive 212-183-202—597 series in Ladies' Commercial League at Mayfair Lanes. Marlene thus again qualifies for Bowler-of-the-Year rolloff.

City Clubs Dominate

Greater Victoria teams proved to be too much for visiting opposition in exhibition high school basketball games Friday.

Mt. Douglas and Oak Bay won over mainland teams in the Ram tournament at Mt. Douglas; Vic High beat visiting Cowichan; and Belmont and Reynolds defeated mainland teams in games at Belmont.

Oak Bay, who won the Ram tournament last year, moved into the final by tripping Vancouver Technical as Larry Dalziel scored 30 points for the Bays.

Mt. Douglas earned the chance to win its own tournament by thumping Burnaby Central Wildcats 87-21 behind the 21-point performance of Rob Spanier.

Vancouver Tech and Burnaby Central will tangle in the consolation game at 7 p.m. and the Bays and the Rams will clash at 8:30 at Mt. Douglas.

At Vic High, Ken Wiens, Tony Carlson and Rick Pyatt each scored 12 points to lead the Totems to a 69-44 victory over Cowichan. Rick Evans topped Cowichan with 14.

At Belmont, the Braves got 17 points from Dave English and 13 from Stu Coventry as they whipped Delbrook Hilltoppers of North Vancouver, 74-47.

In the other contest at Belmont, Reynolds Roadrunners bumped Windsor of Vancouver 58-42. Charlie Hunter scored 21 points for the Roadrunners with Greg McInnis and Jim Dunn each adding 11.

Shawnigan Lake Teams Visit U.K.

Shawnigan Lake School first and second XVs are going to pad their rugby experience starting Sunday when they leave for a tour of England and Wales.

The two rugby sides will make a three-week, six-match tour of the United Kingdom before returning Dec. 22 in time to spend Christmas at home.

The Canadians will play matches against Hurstpeirpoint School in Sussex, The Royal Grammer School in Newcastle, Sevenoaks School in Kent, Whitgift School in South London, Brynteg Comprehensive School in Bridgend, Wales, and Monmouth School in Wales.

The visiting 34 Canadian players and coach Derek Hyde-Lay will be guests of each of the schools.

Willis Squad Drops Wrestling Decision

S. J. Willis Junior High School athletes ran into muscle trouble Friday in dual-meet wrestling competition.

The Victoria team lost for only the second time in 15 meets, dropping a 109-41 decision to Pitt Meadows Junior High at S. J. Willis.

Jerry Doucette won three matches to lead Johnston Heights to its draw with S. J. Willis.

Dan Thomas (122-pounds), Rick Logue (135) and Rol Schetterer (190) each won two matches for the Victoria team.

Other double winners were: Martin Ling (130) of Johnston Heights; and Bill Mitchell (89), Tony McNeil (123), Scott Charlton (98) and Rob Kuiper (145), all of Pitt Meadows.

U.S. Bowlers Sweep Titles

CARACAS (AFP) — Americans won both the men's and women's championships at the sixth Inter-American bowling tournament Thursday.

Ron Woolet, with 6047 pins in 28 lines, edged out Virg Enger, 6016, for the men's title. Olga Gloor, with 4679 pins in 26 games, headed a sweep of the first four places by U.S. women.

Cathy Townsend of Laval, Que., was fifth in the event, in which women from 11 countries competed.

Vic High Remains Unbeaten

MISSION — Vic High was one of three unbeaten teams after the first half of round-robin play in the championship flight of the B.C. high-school girls' volleyball tournament.

The Island champions defeated Langley, 15-6, 9-15, 15-9, North Kamloops, 13-15, 15-8, 15-9, and Centennial of the Fraser Valley, 15-10, 15-11.

Today in the championship flight, Vic High takes on defending-champion Queen Elizabeth of Vancouver, Prince George and West Vancouver. Queen Elizabeth, which is seeking its third straight title and Prince George, are the other unbeaten teams.

Vancouver Island's other representative Spectrum leads the nine-team consolation round after scoring victories over Hillside of North Vancouver, Prince Charles of Creston and New Westminster.

The top two finishers in championship play meet in the best-of-five final at 7:30 p.m. today.

Gary Equals Record

RIO DE JANEIRO, Brazil (Reuter) — Gary Player of South Africa equalled the world record for a tournament the Brazilian open championship Friday.

Player, this year's Masters and British Open champion, tied the record set in 1952 at Sao Paulo by veteran Sam Snead of the United States and matched by Snead in a 1958 tournament.

The 39-year-old Player was tied with four others for the lead in the tournament after a 67 in the opening round Thursday. His 59 put him well ahead.

Trade Barrier Broken

Times News Service

In a rare move, a National Hockey League club has sold a player to a World Hockey Association team.

St. Paul player agent A. Keith Hanzel announced Friday that Butch Deadmarsh has been sold by the NHL's Kansas City Scouts to Vancouver Blazers of the WHA.

Deadmarsh, an alternate captain with the Scouts, signed a contract with the Blazers last summer. The contract was to take effect in the fall of 1975.

Hanzel said he was authorized by Vancouver general manaager Joe Croizer "to make overtures to the Scouts and their general manager, Sid Abel, to get Deadmarsh sooner than that."

Deadmarsh was allowed to clear through NHL waivers and was sold Friday morning to the Blazers, making it the first time an NHL team has sold a player to a WHA club.

Elsewhere in hockey, Indianapolis Racers have sent centre Joe Robertson to Minnesota Fighting Saints for centre Jim Johnson in a straight-player WHA trade.

The injury-riddled Toronto Maple Leafs of the NHL have called up 29-year-old defencemen Clair Alexander from Oklahoma City Blazers of the Central League.

Lakers Stretch Lead

LAKE COWICHAN — Cowichan Lakers are continuing to make it a one-team romp at the top in the South Island Big Six Hockey League.

The undefeated Lakers made it a 15-point spread between themselves and second place Stockers North Americans by taking a 7-4 decision Friday over Stockers, the only team to earn a point against the Lakers this season.

Jim Peterson and Neil Sanders led the Lakers with two goals each with singles coming from Alvin White, Jim Kipp and Bob Balicki.

	P	W	L	T	F	A	Pts
Cowichan	17	16	0	1	113	47	33
Stockers	15	8	5	2	79	61	18
Chemainus	16	4	9	3	66	81	11
Ingraham	13	4	7	2	41	72	10

Next game: Tonight — Ingraham at Chemainus.

Tennis at Lambrick

A new district tennis club, planning to operate out of Lambrick Park, is looking for prospective members.

Saanich Tennis Club, which plans to install six courts at Lambrick, will hold membership registration next Wednesday, Thursday and Friday at the Gordon Head Recreation Centre between 7 ond 9 p.m.

A spokesman for the new club said it will be formed as a non-profit society and will be operated "by and for the members."

Crimson Tide Best

By The Associated Press

Coach Paul (Bear) Bryant, happy with Alabama's 17-13 win Friday over Auburn, said he believes his Crimson Tide is the best college-football team in the United States.

The decision over Auburn gives Alabama an 11-0 record to take into its Jan. 1 rematch with Notre Dame in Miami's Orange Bowl. It also gave the Tide its fourth consecutive Southeastern Conference crown, a record, and its 43rd victory in its last 44 regular-season games.

In Friday's other major college game, Texas Longhorns beat Texas A and M 32-3. The Texas win clinched a Cotton Bowl berth for Baylor Bears.

Even if the Bears (5-1) were to lose to Rice today and tie Texas and Texas A and M for the Southwestern Conference title, Baylor would go to the bowl because they've never been in bowl competition. The other two have.

U.S. Golfers Lead

OSAKA, Japan (AP) — A nine-man United States team, led by Hubert Green, stretched its lead to six strokes over Japan after Saturday's second round of the fourth annual U.S.-Japan golf tournament.

The Americans led 1,167-1,173 in the event, in which each golfer plays 18 holes each day, with the scores of the best eight over three rounds counting in the chase for the $15,000 prize awarded to the winning team.

Green, the first-day individual leader, matched par-72 Saturday for a 140 total and a one-stroke lead over Japan's Teruo Sugihara, who had a second-round 68.

Americans held the next two spots, Brian Allin at 142 and Dick Stockton at 143. Each had a 73 Saturday.

The Same Old Ali . . .

LONDON (AP) — Muhammad Ali breezed into London and told British reporters Friday he was "a black superman" and "the greatest of all time."

The world heavyweight boxing champion surfaced after a few hours rest following a long flight from Kinshasa where he was a guest of honor at Zaire's Independence Day celebrations. He said he was ready to fight anyone and everyone anywhere.

Ali is here on a five-day visit in which he is making several lucrative public appearances. Also in town was Ali's manager, Hubert Muhammad, and a host of British fight promoters. But it was thought unlikely any definite announcement would be made on future fight plans for the champion.

Minister Defines Roles

Who or what is a minister?

That's a question Father Robert Crawley of Victoria's Christ Church Cathedral has tried to answer.

"All who have been baptized are 'ministers of Christ,'" he quoted from 1 Cor. 4:1. "All who acknowledge Jesus as Lord are called to minister the Risen Life of the world.

But what about the ordained minister?

He is one approved and admitted to the ministry by lawful authority, as Crawley says the church prayer book points out.

'Lawful authorty' is a term whose meaning depends on an individual's doctrinary beliefs, he said.

The Church, encompassing such authority, could be construed as the congregation or a Divine Creation whose being cements the congregation.

Whichever, "lawful authority is Christ," said Crawley.

The Apostles were not the first Bishops but appointed them by the laying on of hands for the purpose of transmitting the Apostolic doctrine and authority.

The official ministry combines the three orders of Bishops, priests and deacons, all of whom are really priests, he pointed out.

"There is no promotion on the secular sense of the word . . . and no such thing as priesthood by degrees."

"The poorest priest in an isolated mission is 'equal' to an Archdeacon and just as important in God's scheme of salvation," said Crawley.

"The titles all refer to specific functions of areas of work within the priesthood."

He explained the work of the three. Bishops ordain men to the priesthood or diaconate and priests to the episcopate, and administers the Sacrament of Confirmation.

Priests consecrate the Eucharist, give absolution to sinners and anoint the sick among other duties.

Deacons, in the modern-day church perform no specific functions and merely take the step on the way to the priesthood.

Grass Roots Pushing Church

By DAVID E. ANDERSON
UPI Religion Writer

For years, the United Church of Christ has been the epitome of the liberal mainline denomination increased attention, especially by the national offices and agencies, to social activism with a consequent decline in membership.

For half a decade now the accepted wisdom has been that social and political activism on the part of the national church inevitably leads to a decline in membership and giving at the grass roots level. For awhile, the statistics were there to make that case.

Recently, however, the statistics on giving have begun to show something else — that members who stuck with the church, giving at least silent assent to the activism, are now digging deeper into their pocketbooks to support their denominations.

Now, the Rev. J. Alan McLean, secretary for evangelism of the UCC's Board for Homeland Ministries, thinks there can be a turn around of the membership decline and the church's evangelization effort.

The first thing to note about McLean's belief is that he doesn't believe that change is going to come from either him or his board.

It is the grass roots — congregations and individuals — that are the key. McLean does not see the national church providing a nationwide pattern for all churches to follow but rather it will provide training of a cadre of "evangelism consultants," clergy and laity excited about the possibilities of evangelism in their local communities.

"Evangelism is not the result of clever salesmanship or ingenious techniques," he said in an interview. "It is the Christian's response to the spiritual hungers of society."

"We define' evangelism pretty straightforwardly as getting out with the story, a freeing story that relates one to Jesus Christ as Lord, to the church as a servant community and to the neighbor in need," he said.

According to McLean, the national church is beginning to see "a genuine sense of vision, excitement and possibility among grass roots churches, among people who are saying 'What is our story, what is the story we have to tell?' Then, working at getting it clear and asking, 'How do we get it out?'

Gabriel Fackre, professor of theology at Andover Newton Theological School, has provided much of the theological underpinnings for the UCC effort. (Fackre has put together his theological understanding of evangelism is a book "Do And Tell," published by Wm. B. Eerdmans).

"Evangelism is the bodying forth of the christian tale in the conviction that 'the word will do it,'" according to Fackre. "It is not manipulating emotions or 'collecting scalps.'"

SINTERKLAAS COMING

Every year Sinterklaas arrives in the Netherlands boat to celebrate his birthday Dec. 6.

The tradition will be upheld by Victoria's Dutch community this year as they sponsor the arrival of the "holy Spanish bishop" especially fond of children, at the Inner Harbor Dec. 7.

Along with Sinterklaas will arrive two Black Peters and others in traditional costume plus children from the Vancouver Island Netherlands Association.

Carillon bells at the provincial museum, donated to B.C. from the Dutch community in centennial year, will be played as Sinterklaas arrives.

The saint comes into town not to receive gifts for his birthday but to give them to children.

On the evening of Dec. 5 Dutch children sing Sinterklaas songs and leave a clog close to the chimney filled with carrots, bread or hay for the saint's grey horse which he rides through town loading presents.

Gifts are often packets of ginger cake, marzipan or chocolate, and both Sinteklaas and Black Peter can enter the houses to fill the clogs.

Part of the gift tradition will be realized when Victoria's celebration includes Sinterklaas's arrival at Norway House for a children's party.

Trade Ban Ends

NEW DELHI—In a major step toward normalizing their relations, India and Pakistan agreed today to end a nine-years ban on trade between the two countries.

"This is just a beginning," Pakistan Commerce Secretary Ahmed Naik said after signing a two-page protocol that commits the two subcontinent neighbors to lifting the embargo next Saturday. Commerce Secretary Y. T. Shah signed for India.

The protocol was heralded by both sides as an important step in the process of restoring and normalizing India-Pakistan relations, severed after the December, 1971, war over Bangladesh, the former East Pakistan.

The trade embargo was a carry-over from the India-Pakistan war fought in September, 1965, over Kashmir. Trade relations were never re-established after that conflict.

UVic Chorus Presents Mass

Both Chorus and Orchestra from the University of Victoria will present a Mass at Christ Church Cathedral on the nights of Dec. 6 and 7.

These Friday and Saturday masses will begin at 8 p.m. and feature the music of Austrian composer Anton Bruckner who was organist of Linz Chthedral in the last century.

Jesuits to Meet

ROME (Reuter) — Rev. Pedro Arrupe, 67-year-old head of the Jesuit order of the Roman Catholic Church, said Thursday a general congregation of the order to be held soon will make an objective and open examination of its problems. Only the seventh meeting since the order was founded in 1530 by St. Ignatius of Loyola to be called for reasons other than election of a new superior general, it is expected to last between two and three months. Membership of the order last January was put at 29,462 — 7,000 fewer than in 1965.

TREE CARE CORNER

Victoria has long been known for its beautiful gardens and trees. Because of this, Victoria residents are fussy. They want their trees to look like trees. They want people working in their gardens who really care. This makes us happy! We've been successfully serving our fussy Victoria residents for 12 years. If you are fussy and haven't tried us, maybe you should . . .

P.S.: We are now accepting bookings for fruit tree pruning and spraying. Can we assist you?

'NO FARM AID, NO WELFARE'

Welfare should not be given people who refuse to do farm work, members of the B.C. Federation of Agriculture agrees.

Labor shortages in agriculture should be eased before welfare payments are indiscriminately made, they said.

"We are very concerned about the supply of farm labor," said Federation president Robert Reynolds.

"It is one thing to help farmers make their operations more profitable but it is also very necessary to do something about the terrible hours they must work."

The statement was in reaction to Agriculture Minister Dave Stupich's comments at the federation convention being held at the Empress.

Stupich praised the provincial farm Income Assurance Program which he said was greatly improving the economic position of farmers in B.C.

A second motion, carried Thursday at the convention aimed to get young people involved in farming.

The motion proposed the abolition of succession duties in cases where a wife or family member carries on the farm operation for not less than 10 years from the date of a farmer's death.

Perspectives and Prejudices

Clergy Preach Word of Freud

By REV. J. A. DAVIDSON

In our grandfather's day when a preacher thundered from the pulpit, "Thus saith the Lord", his people would perk up and take notice. Now, to get attention and acceptance, a preacher has merely to say in a matter-of-fact voice, "As psychology teaches . . ."

Psychological principles and methods are now extensively used by the clergy. At the same time, psychology provides new ways of challenging and criticizing religious faith. The most influential psychological stance here is the psychoanalytic, the depth psychology which derives from the work of Sigmund Freud. Perhaps we should rewrite some of our hymns — for instance:

"Psychoanalysis pilot me
Over life's tempestuous sea:
Unknown complexes in me are hid,
Rampaging ego and sneaky id;
Adjustment only comes from thee
Psychoanalysis pilot me."

Some thinkers dismiss belief in God as merely a "psychological event" and a rather discreditable one at that. Wide approval is given to Freud's description of religion as "the universal obsessional neurosis of humanity" which is a fancy way of saying that if you are religious you are sick-sick-sick.

In his influential 1928 book, The Future of an Illusion, Freud declared religious belief to be a harmful illusion rooted in irrational, unconscious forces. But, unlike many who have followed him Freud was too self-critical and too scrupulous to put more weight on his principles than they could logically carry. There is more tentativeness, more hesitancy, more acknowledged speculation, in Freud's teaching on religion than either his friends or his enemies generally recognize.

Some who have been influenced by Freud say to christian and Jewish believers, "You believe simply because you wish to believe. Your belief is a self-inflicted illusion, simply an exercise in wishful-thinking." But surely the religious believer can here apply the Freudian technique to disbelief and say to the critic, "Your belief about my belief, and your rejection of religion, is simply the fulfilment of your wishes, your own self-inflicted illusion."

Some Freudians trace belief in God to a father-complex, and they put forth a quite impressive case. But surely an equally impressive case can be put that disbelief in God can be traced to that pet of the Freudians, the Oedipus complex, to a jealous desire to overthrow and supplant the father. This game of psychological ploy and counter-ploy leads to a stalemate and the issue must be settled on other grounds.

It is significant that Freud, in his book, Civilization and Its Discontents, published in 1929, said that in his earlier book, The Future of an Illusion, he was concerned "much less with the deepest sources of religious feeling than with what the ordinary man understands about his religion." And, with his customary honesty, he urged his followers to pay respectful attention to the deeper sources of religious feeling which he had not attempted to probe. And we must always remember that Freud did not seriously study religion outside his consulting-room.

Kilian Singers To Perform For Lutherans

Next weekend Victoria's Kilian Singers will provide the choral parts of a service at Cedar Hill X Road's Lutheran Church of the Cross.

The service will take place Sunday, Dec. 8 at 7:30 p.m.

Twelve sopranos, ten altos, three tenors and three bases are scheduled to combine their voices in the group that evening.

Any singers interested in joining are welcome. Conductor Heinz Kilian is always looking for new members.

Accompanist Norma Willing will also attend the service.

Coquitlam Man Early Lucky Leo

J. Greenwood of Smithers won the $500 sellers prize.

Emergency Landing

RIO DE JANEIRO (AP) — The pilot of an Aerolineas Argentinas Boeing 707 with 80 passengers aboard made an emergency landing 30 minutes after takeoff from Rio Thursday when he discovered a hole in his windshield, airport officials said. The jet was on the last leg of a flight from New York to Buenos Aires. Officials said the pilot feared decompression through the damaged window.

When Performer Bites Back . . .

audrey johnson

I am sure there will be a certain satisfaction to many readers to know that performers do sometimes strike back at their critics.

It is not uncommon for critics to receive berating letters but when the needle is applied with a flourish and publicly, that becomes close to man biting dog.

Harold C. Schonberg, the New York Times' distinguished music critic, tells this story against himself.

For some years he has been persistently critical of a certain New York City Opera tenor for his "pinched" vocal production. The tenor said and did nothing to counter the criticism, until recently.

A few weeks ago he was singing in a production of Verdi's Un Ballo in Maschera. After a fortissimo high C he turned, walked to the footlights and announced in ringing tones: "That pinched high C was for Harold C. Schonberg."

The fact that immediately following the performance the tenor was fired for unprofessional conduct, is not received as unction by Schonberg.

Rather he feels that the manager of the company had overreacted and that the tenor should get a medal for bravery.

Without bias on behalf of critics however, I lean toward the suspicion that Schonberg as an informed and objective listener had been correct in his assessment.

Tenors, a notable adjudicator once remarked, are a rare breed. They can no more tell what they sound like, he said, than a certain kind of monkey can tell that it has a blue and rose colored bottom.

It is amusing to reflect that the N.Y. Opera singer of this story almost certainly thinks of Schonberg as an ass, an ignoramus, or at the very least, a narrow-minded pedant.

But flip the coin. Suppose the critic had been as persistent in admiration as he was in condemnation. What would he have appeared as then to the singer but an intelligent and perceptive reviewer?

Those who follow this particular path of journalism quickly become accustomed to being acclaimed like Shakespeare's Portia — for their impartial wisdom when judgments are favorable, and condemned for stupidity and rancor when they are not.

But no critic anywhere can be 100 per cent right in all his judgments. That would be asking too much of mortal man as history, bristling with the judgment errors of famous people, confirms.

The other night a local play production, while irritating in the matter of interpretation, left me with the impression of several outstanding performances and an overall technical expertise superior to much that has recently been offered on Victoria stages.

The Hostage, Brendan Behan's wryly comic, appallingly tragic script, is on again this weekend and next at Open Space. And despite my strong disagreement with director Maurice Harty's interpretation, it is still well worth the attention of anyone interested in young, highly talented actors involved with technically strong direction.

Camosun College students make up the bulk of the cast in secondary roles and obviously the new theatre arts program has attracted a most promising group. All but two or three were distinctly above average.

Leads were locally available professionals and experienced amateurs — a situation that leads to the inevitable thought that here are the people to form the resident core of a professional company.

Add to these five or six, at least another half dozen in the city who are thoroughly competent, and there is your company that under a gifted director could adroitly perform a wide range of plays, only excepting those demanding a high and pure classical style.

With guest artists engaged now and then to play specific parts when required, that, for my money, is the concept of a proper regional theatre.

More information has arrived concerning the triumph in international competition of the Orford String Quartet which was reported in the Times this week.

Regarded as Canada's leading string quartet, the ensemble of young musicians was awarded first prize of 20,000 Swiss francs ($6,800) after competing against seven other string quartets in Stockholm.

Organized by the European Broadcasting Union, the competition drew representations from Great Britain, Austria, Spain, Sweden, Finland, Germany and The Netherlands as well as Canada.

Andrew Dawes, first violin of the quartet, is a western Canadian who studied with Clayton Hare (who has directed summer schools of music in Victoria for the past several years). Murray Adaskin, now resident here and teaching at Victoria Conservatory of Music, and Lorand Fenyves of Geneva.

The Orford Quartet will be in Victoria in March to give a concert under the auspices of University of Victoria's music department.

Dylan Back on 'Highway'

By LARRY SLOMAN

ROLLING STONE

NEW YORK — It looked like old times at Columbia's Studio A. John Hammond Sr. was there. Phil Ramone was working the board. Eric Weissberg and Barry Kornfeld, two old Gaslight regulars, were unpacking their guitars. And sitting out in the cavernous studio, acoustic in hand and harmonica holder in place, practically hidden behind a battery of six microphones, Bob Dylan was creating another album. And it was almost as if Dylan were consciously conjuring up the ambience of the early '60s, surrounding himself with the same familiar faces, attempting to exorcise, as he put it on Planet Waves, "the phantoms of my youth." And by all accounts, he was eminently successful.

"This is his first definitive LP in a long time, it's a return to 1965," Barry Fornfeld commented. "The songs are great. Lyrically, he's writing stories again — little vignettes about himself," said Weissberg. "I'm bereft of words to describe it. It's the best material I ever heard him do," added New Riders' steel man Buddy Cage. "Is Dylan back?" chuckled a Columbia executive. "Where's he been?"

Hammond heard of the session the day it started "and I could hardly believe it," he said. "So I went over there. I said to Bob. This is a strange day to start recording,' because it was Rosh Hoshanah and it was hard to get musicians. And Bob said, 'Well, why not today? It's the New Year, isn't it? I have never heard Bob so assured and so musically sophisticated. There's folk and classical influences on the new stuff. He's got four or five incredible singles. I'm still absolutely stunned."

The album, which will be rushed into release shortly, is titled Blood on the Tracks (Columbia PC 33235), and, judging from the cuts, it appears that Dylan has reimmersed himself into the world of carnival people, energy vampires, and karma hustlers — and they're all out there, back on Highway 61. There are several opuses on this album, "Idiot Winds" for one ("Every time you open your mouth—it's idiot winds—it's a wonder you breathe at all"), a nine-minute foray into the phenomenology of fame. There's "Jack of Hearts," a song that Dylan told Mick Jagger, who dropped by during the sessions, was unlike anything he'd ever written. It's murky, compressed, like a 14th century narrative poem, really more like a show than a song as it unfolds an impressionistic tale of carnivals and saloons and those who live on the underside of life.

There are also love songs, cuts like "You're Gonna Make Me Lonesome (When You Go)," and "If You See Her, Say Hello," "You're a Big Girl Now" and "All Tangled Up in Blue." Dylan also recorded titles like "Shelter From the Storm," "Buckets of Rain," "Meet Me in the Morning," "Twist of Fate," and "Up to Me."

The music is sparse, with a minimum of drums, a lot of bass, a bit of organ, some pedal steel and, of course, Bob's acoustic guitar and harmonica. The scheduled cover is a shot of a huge red rose on a white background. And Dylan reportedly was hunting for old photos of himself performing at Gerde's Folk City for the back sleeve.

This album like most of Dylan's previous sessions, was recorded with a minimum of preparation. According to Columbia sources, Dylan flew into New York around the middle of September, called up the company and said, "Let's do a record." On such short notice, engineer Ramone was unable to secure the New York studio musicians he routinely employs — people like Pretty Purdie, Kenny Ascher and David Spinozza. Ultimately, Eric Weissberg (half of the famous banjo duel) brought along his band Deliverance, and Kornfeld and Cage played in, but the scenario sounded like Weissberg's 115th Nightmare:

"I had seen Bob on the street about a year ago, and we talked for awhile, and he said he wanted me to work with him. But then I hadn't heard from him. All of a sudden, a year later, I get a call from his office saying, "What's your availability next week? Then I didn't hear anything for awhile. On the following Monday I had one date, a jingle from 10-11 a.m., and I happened to be home at 2 in the afternoon — which is amazingly unusual — and the phone rang and a woman says, "Hi, can you be at Bob's session at 4 p.m.?" I said no, because I had to have a meeting with my band, but I'll be there at 6, where is it? She says Studio A. I said there's only about 1,400 Studio As in New York, but by then it dawned on me it was Columbia's studio so I asked her what did Bob want me to bring. She said what do you play? Well I play eight or nine instruments, but she said she didn't know what he wanted. So I told her to get in touch with Bob and call me back.

"After an hour, I called her and she said Bob left for the studio and was unreachable. So I asked who else was on the date, but she didn't know. So I packed two or three guitars in my car and drove down. I finally reached Ramone on the phone and asked him who he got. He said he tried everyone, but it was too short notice and it looked like no one was coming. So I got a band, and just then Bobby walked into the studio and Phil asked Bob and he said sure bring the whole band over."

Dylan had been recording for a few hours. He played back those songs but then wanted to do some new ones, and Deliverance was forced to pick up the tunes cold.

"It was weird," Weissberg said. "You couldn't really watch his fingers 'cause he was playing in a tuning arrangement I had never seen before. If it was anybody else, I would have walked out. He put us at a real disadvantage. If it hadn't been that we like the songs, it would have been a drag. His talent overcomes a lot of stuff."

Once he got underway, Dylan seemed deadly serious. Security was extremely tight and visitors were few. However, Jagger dropped by a few nights, unwinding from work in a nearby studio and where he was editing Stones' tapes. He danced and drank champagne from the bottle, and occasionally huddled with Dylan between takes, offering production suggestions. The sessions had no formal producer.

It may seem strange that Dylan would record an album so soon after the back-to-back summer releases of Planet Waves and Before the Flood, especially in light of his past habit of impact, especially an album a year. The immediacy of Blood on the Tracks may be due to the relative lack of impact, especially critical impact, of his last two albums. It is more likely, however, that Blood on the Tracks is the beginning of a new cycle that Dylan implicitly promised with Planet Waves.

Touring Show 'Nutcracker' At Playhouse

Danced by the Oakland Ballet Company, The Nutcracker is a pre-Christmas treat for the family coming to the McPherson Playhouse Dec. 9 and 10.

The score, often played as a concert suite, contains such delights as Waltz of the Flowers, Dance of the Sugarplum Fairy, Dance Chinois and many others.

The colorful spectacle will be performed at 8:30 p.m. on the two evenings and at 4:30 p.m. on the afternoon of Dec. 10. Tickets are on sale now at McPherson box office and at the new Victoria Ticket Centre at Eaton's.

OISTRAKH HERE

The Victoria Symphony Orchestra continues its 34th season Sunday and Monday with another international guest artist of high repute taking the solo spot.

With Laszlo Gati conducting, violinist Igor Oistrakh will perform the great virtuoso concerto that won for its composer, Aram Khatchaturian, the Stalin Prize in 1939.

Cesar Franck's D minor Symphony will be the major orchestral work to be performed. This charming symphony is one of a small group of late 19th century compositions in the genre which has found a place in the classical succession.

Glinka's Russian and Ludmilla Overture will provide an exotic flavoring to the concerts' opening moments.

ALLAN

GZOWSKI
. . . lesson lost

Spoken Words, Written Words

By PAT BARCLAY

It's all wrong and backwards, probably, but I've just finished reading two books about one of the more humanizing elements of life in Canada — CBC radio, that is — and I'm depressed. One of the books is by Andrew Allan, who died in January of this year and whose pioneering work as a producer of radio drama has earned him a place in our history. The other is a collection of bits and pieces first heard on the original version of This Country in the Morning, CBC's network morning show hosted by Peter Gzowski.

Because I happen to reside in an area which did not receive TCTM until about a year ago, I'll have to take everybody's word for it that the Gzowski version became something of a national institution. (As did Andrew Allan's "Stage" series, in the 40's and 50's.) Both books are redolent with a high degree of egotistical male charm which is not, incidentally, why I found them depressing. It's what they reveal about human nature that got me.

Allan's book is part autobiography, part collected essays. The autobiographical section was written to be read on the air in segments, and at first it reads a trifle archly, in a style designed to waylay the wandering ear rather than arrest the roving eye. But once into the book we are soon won over.

Andrew Allan had a happy childhood, and he recalls its best moments with fond grace. He had an exciting, creative career in radio, as everyone who remembers the "stage" series already knows, and his work brought him into contact with everyone from Conrad Aiken to Gracie Fields. (One memorable encounter, at New York's famed Algonquin Hotel, was accidental. Allan had noticed a forlorn little man with "pepper-and-salt coat and trousers, pepper-and-salt hair, even a pepper-and-salt complexion" staring at him in the elevator. They met again in the lobby, where pepper-and-salt apologetically ventures to suggest that they had met before, in Vancouver, B.C., of all places. Allan reports that at this point he began to feel ashamed of his own annoyance. "I always came to the Algonquin," said the little man, "I knew so many people then. Now I'm back, I don't see anyone I know. I guess I've lived past my time." Allan asked his name. It was Robert W. Service.)

But despite so much talent and good fortune going for him, Allan appears to have had a difficult private life. His two brief marriages ended in divorce, and an enduring "affair of the heart" could not supply the emotional anchor so sensitive a man required. He survived the sinking of the Athenia on the first day of World War II, only to learn that his father had perished. And in his 49th year, television arrived.

Harry J. Boyle, who wrote introductions to both sections of Allan's book, describes him as a "television casualty". "Perhaps if he had been employed as a counsellor, a source of ideas, rather than as a participant in the abrasive struggle of production . . ." writes Boyle, and thereby hangs a tale of human stupidity and waste. Andrew Allan did come back, almost, as a radio essayist, and some of his work is reproduced in the Gzowski collection, but he deserved a kinder fate. If you remember John Drainie as Mr. Arcularis, or Lorne Greene as Captain Ahab, or Wullie MacCrimmon's Black Bonspiel, you'll understand.

P.G.'s Book About TCTM (if there are any annual prizes handed out for unwieldy titles, this one's a shoo-in) ought to be fun. It has lively pictures by David Shaw, whose style you'll recognize even if you don't recall his name, lots of entertaining "filler" material in the way of limericks, quizzes and recipes, and some genuine high points of sincerity, humor and wisdom contributed by Gzowski's letter-writing listeners themselves. (Here's a sample joke to try out on the children: "Where does the Lone Ranger take his garbage?" "to the dump, to the dump, to the dump, dump, dump.")

But Gzowski dominates the book just as he domlnated the radio show, and to my mind he comes off second-best in print. His own pieces, which sounded fine when read aloud in that shaggy deep voice, seem thin and syrupy now. The two people he'd most like to be when he grows up, Gzowski tells us cutely, are W. O. Mitchell and Paul Hiebert. (Both of them writers, you'll notice. And why not? Writers are our most interesting citizens today.) But what does P. G. plan to do, now that he's left TCTM?

Like Ferdinand, he wants to "smell the flowers." Yet his book is dotted with examples of people who have tried the flower path and found it flawed. You can't run away from life. P. G., you simply have to make the best you can of it, wherever you are. Why didn't TCTM teach you that?

Riotous Fantasy on Montreal Low-Life

By SUSAN MUSGRAVE

It's a strange feeling to come out of a novel where you have co-existed with prostitutes, female impersonators, drug addicts, murderers and thieves. It's an even stranger feeling to realize the novel has convinced you that the lives of these bizarre characters are quite normal. So normal, in fact, that when Ti-Cul escapes from prison and butchers the farmer and his family who had tormented him in his youth, you tend to overlook the messy details and write it all off as an everyday occurrence.

ST. LAWRENCE BLUES, by Marie-Claire Blais. Translated by Ralph Manheim. Doubleday. $8.95.

In retrospect I find this rather alarming. I had always considered myself to be a reasonably good judge of character. But in this case I found myself feeling more on the side of the killer than of his victims.

What makes this book so convincing to someone whose lifestyle is totally alien to its reality? What is it that leaves a reader quite defenceless; vulnerable to the point of being manipulated far beyond his own standards?

Marie-Claire Blais has never produced anything remotely like this before and this is her 14th novel. In the past the critics have labelled her "morbid", "gothic": her characters are usually maimed and suffering (if not physically then certainly in a psychological sense); her specialty has been degradation and the macabre side of human nature. St. Lawrence Blues contains elements of all these things, but it is also a riotous fantasy about contemporary Montreal. The book takes the reader on a picaresque journey through the lower half (the underworld) of Quebec society. Political satire appears in the strange interactions of people who talk about revolution and separatism without really understanding them. The dust-jacket talks about "the disaster inherent in Canada's cultural schizophrenia". It also says something about Canada's blind march toward a civil war as vicious as Ireland's.

St. Lawrence Blues is a translation of Un Joualonais, sa Joualonie. Joual is the "language of the people" in Quebec. Among a certain group of writers in that province it has been adapted and glorified to some extent — as a symbol of their cultural corruption. Failure to write in it, moreover, is a sign of ideological denunciation. Some of this inverse snobbery has been directed at Blais — and it has been suggested that in this book she out-jouals the most ardent joualonists. Without being pretentious.

Ti-Pit, the protagonist, is the joualonais. His name means "Little Nobody". Raised in an orphanage where he and his dark friend Ti-Cul were instant outcasts (only the fair-haired, blue-eyed babies found homes) he is an ex-jailbird presently being exploited as an employee at the Rubber Company managed by scheming English-speaking Canadians. Through Ti-Pit we are introduced to a very weird bunch of characters: Baptiste, a fellow-worker, fired by the Rubber Company so they won't have to pay him a pension; Ti-Guy, his son, an incurable addict; Mimi, a drag-queen stripper who has a room in the boarding house where Ti-Pit stays; Mere Fontaine, the motherly landlady who takes in all kinds off the street including two lesbians (by day) who are hookers (by night). Ti-Pit quits his job at the Rubber Company and goes to work as helper on an ambulance. The ambulance driver is a sadistically morbid fellow, so steeled against death that other people's suffering has become almost a sport for him.

None of the real joualonie — the poor, the ignorant, the sickly, the unhappy — are interested in politics. This is where Papillon and Papineau enter the cause. Papineau is a crypto-Marxist who constantly denounces his "bourgeois" friend, Papillon, the 'self-crowned poet laureate of French Canada'. Papillon patronizes Ti-Pit in the hope of extracting the essence of joualonism out of him.

BLAIS
. . . change of style

The novel ends with the death of a student in a violent demonstration at Christmas when the French-Canadian workers go on strike in Montreal and Quebec. Marie-Claire Blais contrasts the anonymous political death of the student with the desolate suffering of Ti-Guy, dying alone in a welfare hospital waiting for his estranged parents.

Above all else St. Lawrence Blues is a very funny novel. Sarcasm is levelled at everything: every individual and institution is satirized with equal bawdiness and venom. When a young cancer victim decides to "get better" the ambulance driver has a good laugh: "There's nothing as diabolical as hope, son." Policemen at the demonstration are described as "thirty snow-covered pine trees". Since they are on strike as well they don't bother to stop a gang of hoodlums from breaking into a big department store and helping themselves to the merchandise.

Ralph Manheim's translation of this book is excellent up to a point. The only criticism I have with it as it stands is that there is no way of telling just where the joual words occurred. I suspect that much of the joual is virtually untranslatable as it already includes a number of English words anyway. It would have been useful, though, to have had these joual English words identified.

This novel is one of a series about contemporary Quebec: Mlle. Blais has already started work on the sequel. She's obviously a writer who knows how to manipulate from all angles; it's hard to predict what she could come up with next.

Gritty Scots Ship Pioneers

By JAMES McCOOK

Hundreds of thousands of settlers were carried to Canada by ships of the Allan Line which officially became part of the Canadian Pacific Railway in 1917.

RAVENSCRAG: The Allan Royal Mail Line, by Thomas E. Appleton. McClelland and Stewart. $12.50.

The Allan Line was so well known, and so well remembered by older Canadians, that the author appears a little precious in making the main title of his book Ravenscrag. That was the name Sir Hugh Allan gave to his mansion in Montreal and it means nothing to prospective book-buyers who would be interested in stories of Allan Line ships and men. Appleton, who is marine historian with the federal Ministry of Transport, writes with knowledge of the sea and the benefit of research conducted on both sides of the Atlantic.

The Scottish Allans, with Robert Burns, the poet, among their kinsmen, were Scots quite as gritty as the railway-builders of Montreal who came after them. Hugh Allan was settled in Montreal in 1826, encouraged by his father, a shipowner in a small way, to learn the ways of business, a task to which he applied himself diligently. Incidentally, he became fluent in French; a century or so ago, in fur trade as well as in the export-import enterprises, bilingualism was expected of a businessman.

Hugh was one of five brothers. As their father's ships became more numerous, the boys worked to develop business in Canada and Britain, wherever they could be most effective.

They took the great gamble of going to steam from sail and in 1854 their fine new steamship, Canadian, made her maiden voyage from Liverpool to Quebec in 11 days.

Compared to hell-ships of the sailing fleets, in which emigrants were treated as if they were animals, the Canadian reflected the Allan Line's traditional respect for passengers. She had 250 berths for travellers who enjoyed abundant air and light. The state-rooms occupied by 68 cabin passengers were described as "perfect models of elegance and comfort." All passengers had the benefit of cooked meals in contrast to the bare subsistence, little of which was supplied by the ship, available to travellers on most other vessels.

The Canadian did so well that the Allans ordered another steamship, Indian, and, to help pay their bills, were pleased to charter both vessels for profitable charters in carrying troops to the Crimean War from Britain.

The soldiers must have enjoyed these ships; their comrades on other vessels were battened down in the holds.

The brave Allans hurried on to buy two more steamships — the North American and Anglo-Saxon. Before jumping to the conclusion that fortunes were easily won with war charters, the fate of these and other vessels has to be remembered:

The Canadian went aground in the St. Lawrence in 1857 and was lost; the Indian was wrecked on the coast of Nova Scotia in 1859; the Anglo-Saxon in 1863 struck a Newfoundland shore and 238 aboard were drowned. There were other losses — another Canadian was built and in 1861 she went down with the loss of 35 lives, holed by ice in the Gulf of St. Lawrence; in the same year the North Britain sank in the gulf about five miles from shore; in 1863 the Norwegian went to the bottom and in 1864 the Bohemian struck a shoal and sank at Portland, Maine.

By no means all of these losses were covered by insurance. Skippers anxious to make good time, to ensure mail contracts were preserved, perhaps took too many chances in waters with few navigational aids, including lighthouses. There were criticisms but the Victorians accepted that sea travel was full of hazard and the good name of the Allan Line was not greatly harmed. The owners went on to build their fortunes.

In Canadian political history, Hugh Allan briefly was an important figure. Prime Minister Sir John A. Macdonald had said he would help Allan achieve his ambition to be president of the CPR and the contribution of Allan and his backers to election expenses was estimated at $350,000 in all. Macdonald's appeals for cash became public knowledge and Allan did not deny giving political funds.

HUGH ALLAN
. . . costly ambition

The author argues that in those days "politicians paid for votes, contractors paid for contracts. Both paid for the newspapers, which were highly partisan."

That may be true but the Pacific Scandal in which Macdonald and Allan were involved was too much even for the strong stomachs of the day. Not that the principals seemed much hurt. They remained friends and when Allan was asked long afterwards if he regretted his involvement with Macdonald he replied: "Mebbe."

GETTING TO THE BOTTOM WHERE THE RICHES LIE

By GLENNIS ZILM

More than a million square miles of Canada are unknown territory. Some day its fertile valleys and pastures may house herds that will feed millions; the vast resources of oil, gas and metals may be worked; and its recreational and scenic wonders be visited by thousands of school children.

UNDERWATER MAN, by Joe MacInnes. McClelland and Stewart. $8.95.

Today, however, few Canadians dare go, although many of us gaze over the uncharted, unexplored areas every day — at the nearly one-third of Canada that lies under water.

One of the few who knows this Canada as a recreational paradise and a working environment is Joe MacInnes, a doctor, diver, researcher, inventor, businessman, professor, photographer, poet, author and adviser on oceans policy to the federal government.

His new book, a slim 142-page autobiography, sketches the life of the new explorer of Canada, Underwater Man. It tells how, through medicine, he became involved in undersea exploration, first in the United States and then in Canada. It describes this mainly around 11 descents into the underwater world.

One tells how he became, for a brief period, the holder of a record for the longest, deepest dive.

"We have stayed, Jon and I, longer at greater depth than anyone before us. We have set a new record. But what is more senseless under the sea than a 'record'?

"What we have accomplished is something else. We have lived in the depths — in questionable comfort, but at least in security. We have gone out and worked. To be sure, we paid for our two deep days with four days of decompression. But if we had stayed two weeks or two months, the decompression time would have been the same.

"Our successors will stay in the depths that long and longer. They will colonize the sea floor, cultivating its resources instead of pillaging them. Tomorrow the colonist will survey his bottom land through the porthole of his sea-ranch kitchen while a coffeepot simmers on the stove."

Another chapter tells of his more recent accomplishments under Arctic ice in his "subigloo," his own invention. This plexiglass bubble serves, like an explorer's tent, as a refuge for the diver, a shelter from the freezing waters, a communications centre, an equipment store.

It also offers a unique window on an underwater world, a Jules Verne dream become a reality.

The book illustrates MacInnes' huge enthusiasms for this new fluid environment. These infect the reader, too, for MacInnes writes with a poet's eye for images. His first book, published in 1971, was poetry — Underwater Images — and most of his articles, for National Geographic, Sports Illustrated and Maclean's, have been concerned with descriptions of undersea scenes, so it is not surprising that he can take the reader with him.

It is disappointing, however, that the book does not contain any of the color undersea photographs that MacInnes is noted for, both as a still photographer and award-winning film maker.

Sad Chapter of Our History

By PETER MURRAY

The history of the Chinese in this province makes uncomfortable reading for any British Columbians, but none more than newspapermen.

James Morton has gathered his information almost exclusively from newspaper files (it's one of the weaknesses of his book) and the record as revealed in editorials, news stories and headlines is not an ennobling one.

IN THE SEA OF STERILE MOUNTAINS: The Chinese in British Columbia, by James Morton. J. J. Douglas. $12.50.

From the time they began arriving in the province in 1858 until after the Second World War when they were finally given the vote, the Chinese in B.C. were regarded and often treated as something less than human.

And goading the populace on with the demagogic politicians were the leading editors of the day, Amor de Cosmos, John Robson and others unnamed. An unlovely chorus they made.

"While it is generally admitted on all hands that the Chinese must go," said the Vancouver News Advertiser, "it is not usually conceded that the individual member of the objectionable race should be maltreated, if on no other principle than cruelty to animals."

Not surprisingly, the rednecks of the day paid little heed to that hypocritical bow to tolerance, and it wasn't long before Chinese were being harassed and beaten up on the roads and trails of Vancouver.

It's noteworthy that the only times the press seemed to vacillate in its attitude were during the innumerable debates over whether the Chinese should be barred from working in the province. The early trade unions protested that jobs were being taken from whites, while the barons of the province like Robert Dunsmuir and the railway contractors insisted that the Chinese were needed for cheap labor.

In these disputes the newspapers usually sided with the establishment. (What else is new?) In any case, the argument was strictly an economic one without regard for the human issues involved.

But it's not fair to be too judgmental about all this and Morton maintains a studied detachment throughout, suggesting that most of us would have behaved in the same manner as our ancestors under similar conditions.

The first Chinese made little effort to blend into their new community. They maintained their oriental dress, lived in their own ghettoes, didn't learn the language, smoked opium, put human excrement on their vegetable gardens, and sent most of the money they earned back home to China instead of spending it locally.

So Morton is right not to be critical, but that doesn't excuse the bloodless tone of his history. The task of the social historian if not to impose a viewpoint on his findings is at least to absorb the facts and give them shape and form. Taking notes from newspaper microfilm and regurgitating them in a rigid chronological order makes for shallow history.

Having said this, it must be admitted that Morton's sources were limited and he deserves credit for at least digging out the skeleton of a story which has not been told before. If we're lucky someone will come along soon, perhaps from the Chinese community, with access to the language, letters and any other records that may exist, to put some flesh on it.

One of the problems is that the newspapers of the day, at least the editorials, may have been not necessarily more representative of a community's thinking than they are today. That hostility toward the Chinese was widespread in the community is obvious, but whether it was as all-pervasive as the record indicates, is not.

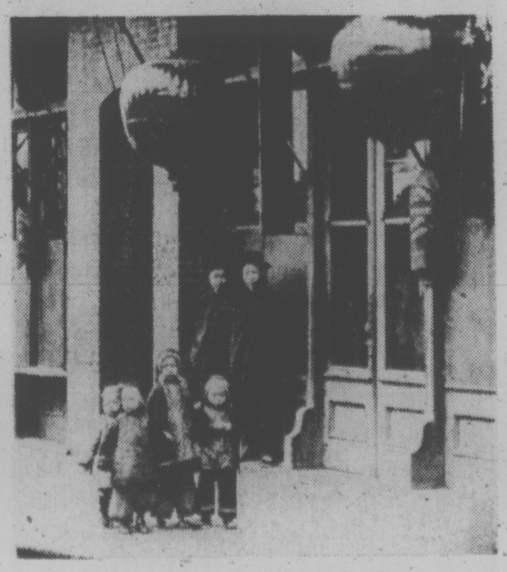
Certainly Morton was able to find only one or two public figures who spoke out on behalf of the Chinese, including the much libelled "hanging judge", Sir Matthew Baillie Begbie.

There's some consolation for Victorians, however, in the fact that although the words were just as shrill here, there was little of the violence inflicted on the Chinese in that other gauche, bustling community on Burrard Inlet.

"Victorians treated the Chinese quite graciously, albeit with some condescension," Morton observes in one of the few asides he allows himself.

This is the second history written by Morton, a Vancouver physician who teaches at the University of B.C. and works on his books in his spare time. His first was a loving history of the Capilano River which he has tramped as an ardent fisherman.

The title selected for this second book is mystifying. "The sea of sterile mountains" was a description of the new province of British Columbia tossed off by a disparaging Eastern politician, without any bearing on the Chinese. Perhaps it's a reflection of Morton's ambivalent attitude toward his subject matter.



Chinese new year in Victoria, circa 1900

A DIARY TOO TRUE TO BE GOOD

H. Gordon Green, known to radio fans as Canada's "Old Cynic" and the author of a dozen books and hundreds of short stories; H. Gordon Green, formerly editor of the Family Herald, now part-time farmer and teacher at Dawson College in Montreal; H. Gordon Green has written a new book. It's called — are you ready? — Diary of a Dirty Old Man.

DIARY OF A DIRTY OLD MAN, by H. Gordon Green. McClelland and Stewart. $7.95.

Diary contains great chunks of woodsy lore and shamelessly folksy humor, plus a stream of anecdotes drawn from Green's experience of teaching. Much of this material is clearly authentic and just the sort of thing you'd expect to find in a diary written by a late-middleaged farmer-teacher who enjoys his work.

Other entries describe the antics of Green's dog Schulz, the "pointless Pointer" who could point beautifully, but at mosquitoes, not birds. These are less obviously authentic, for Schulz's comic behavior is too reminiscent of Snoopy, the Charles Schulz creation. To be sure, we've all known eccentric dogs, but after Snoopy, can they be written about anymore?

Still other entries concern Walter, Green's elderly neighbor, who smacks of Charlie Farquharson. And finally, there is Green's account of his own love life. On the face of it, this would appear to be pure fiction, for the author describes himself as 55, married — in a desultory sort of way — to a woman his own age, and ready and willing for casual affairs. An anonymous admirer sends him a love poem on his birthday, and Green invites us to share in his puzzled relish of the mystery. At last the admirer is unmasked as a 17-year-old high school student. (Class valedictorian, intelligent, beautiful, mature, etc., but 17 nevertheless.) Better judgment, scruples and dignity notwithstanding, true love conspires to win the day and the youngster and Green set up housekeeping in an old building on his property. What happens to the wife is something we never do find out. Apparently Green isn't much interested in her anymore, so presumably he didn't expect his readers to be, either.

This reader, though, remains curious. Throughout the book, Green's handling of his wife problem is unsatisfactory because it is so cursory. His own conduct, with no past history of his married life given to justify it, appears selfish and irresponsible. To enjoy Green's expansive style, to respond to his praise of the joys of country life, we must like him. And the person whom Green describes as himself in Diary of a Dirty Old Man is not that easy to like.

Read as fictionalized autobiography, then, Green's private life appears messy and too good to be true. When we turn to the Author's Postscript on the final page of Diary, however, and discover that not only Schulz and Walter are real, but also the teenaged "wonderful little woman who is still with" Green, we are left to conclude that the diary we have just read is simply too true to be good. P.B.

Camera Club Work Shown

The show can be seen until mid-December, Monday through Friday between 10:00 a.m. and 1:00 p.m.

AN OBSCURE example of Moliere's wit and social satire is this year's UVic theatre department production to be performed in the old world setting of Maltwood Museum. Georges Dandin is the title of the play and it is being directed as a master's thesis by graduate student Sasha Budlovsky. It will be seen at Maltwood starting Friday and running through Dec. 14. In scene above are, from left, Lyn Flitton, Holly Stevenson and Bob Garfat. (Photo by Dietrich)

Carol Tea At Mac

Priced out of the Empress Hotel for some 15 years of entertaining music lovers in the ballroom with their annual carol tea, Victoria Musical Art Society will hold this year's event at McPherson Playhouse.

It will take place Sunday, Dec. 8 at 2:30 p.m.

The carol tea, which is the major source of funds for the annually awarded Musical Art scholarships, will have a different procedure as a result of the change in venue.

A concert of carols by Victoria Conservatory Girls' Choir and the Wee One's Glee Club, both directed by Gladys Pearcy, will be presented in the theatre. This will be followed by the serving of tea in the seasonally decorated upper and lower foyers.

Attendance is limited to 450 persons and tickets are selling rapidly. Ticket information can be obtained by phoning Mrs. Molly Watts, 598-5455.

Wins Award

Mirrors to the Sun, a documentarty film photographed by Norman Keziere of Victoria, for the British Columbia department of travel industry, has been judged the best Canadian documentary of 1974.

The award was made jointly by the Canadian Film Editors' Guild and the Canadian Society of Cinametographers.

Mountain People, Animals Filmed

Man's relation to wild life in the Sierra and the Rocky Mountains in the four seasons of the year is the subject of Alpine World USA, the travel film to be seen at McPherson Playhouse, Tuesday at 6 p.m. and 8:30 p.m.

The color film, related by Eric Pavel, is one of the World Adventure series. Flora and fauna of the areas, activities of the people — canoeists, shepherds; loggers gathered for a world championship timber carnival; rodeo at its best; a ski trip through Yellowstone, an old-fashioned Christmas — these are the highlights.

Subtle Femme Fatale

SAN FRANCISCO — Although she has starred in many of the best films of the last two decades, French actress Jeanne Moreau is not as talked about in the U.S. as her directors — men like Luis Benuel, Orson Welles and Francoisi Truffaut.

Even, among the American cognoscenti who have known and savored her every role, Morea herself remains mysterious and inaccessible. It is no accident.

"What is more important," she says, "is what you see on the screen. I belong to the generation of the New Wave. It changed cinema and made the director most important."

Critics often compare her somewhat battered beauty to that of Bette Davis. She is "brilliant" wrote Pauline Kael. "Her face is a marvel of sullen boredom that can be brought to life by a smile, even a forced, meaningless reflex of a smale."

Kael's description seemed especially apt at an elegant reception in honor of the 46-year-old actress at the French consulate here. Moreau, exhausted after a day of riding in cablecars and walking the streets of Chinatown, exhibiited both the bored frown and the forced smile to 100 assorted diignitaired, local legionnaires and film festival patrols..

She was not at her best until Friday night, when 1,100 fans packed into the Palace of Fine Arts theatre. After watchinig two hours of film cliips spanning her entire career, they rose to give her a standing ovation. Afterward, they sat quietly in awe as she appeared on stage to answer their questions.

How did she become a film actress? "I didn't want to be a film actress. My family didn't allow me to see film." They did allow theatre, however. "The first thiing I saw was Racine's "Phaedre') a 17th-century French classic). When I looked up in the light, I thought to myself, "Oh, I'd like to be up there, too!"

Eventually she was up there, too, for four years with the prestigious Comedie de Francaise.. She, too, performed Racine, and Moliere.

What role most closely resembles her own personality? "Catherine in 'Jules and Jim.'" Catherine is a subtle femme fatale, who comes to dominate the lives of two men who are best of friends.

When it was over, the adoring audience applauded wildely. Moreau broke into one of her very rare, very broad smiles.

Johann Sebastian Bear Gets Survival Boost

By AUDREY JOHNSON
Times Staff

Some bears have to get along with just what nature provides when they're out in the wilderness.

But not Johann Sebastian Bear, who has been thoroughly equipped by Victoria Conservatory of Music women's committee to enjoy life in an Alpine meadow.

He has a warm sleeping bag to curl up in, a tent to shelter him from the dews and the rain, a flashlight in case things get a bit scarey out there.

He doesn't even have to raid anybody's picnic site; he has his own picnic basket complete with real honey and bread.

J. S. Bear's plush hide is clad in a natty alpiner's suit and his shoebutton eyes peer out from under a hat that would look classy on a Swiss yodeller.

With all his paraphernalia, Johann Sebastian will be the central attraction at the Christmas bazaar in aid of scholarship funds, to be held at Craigdarroch Castle, Saturday, Dec. 7.

He is to be raffled and hopes to end up beside some child's Christmas tree. Wednesday and Thursday he will be on display in Eaton's music department. The needlework in the project, from bear to tent, is by Mrs. Charlton W. Bullock, Foul Bay Road.

In addition to the raffle of Johann Sebastian, the bazaar will offer home baking and preserves, candy, Christmas decorations, fine used toys, charming aprons and a whole raft of gift possibilities at a variety stall.

As well as scholarships, proceeds from the affair will be used to purchase special musical equipment and for other projects.

The Bazaar will open in the castle at 1 p.m.

Lib Pioneer Still Going Strong

family

By ELIZABETH FORBES

Marion Royce! Do you know that name? Those interested in women's rights as far back as the 50s will surely recognize it.

She was the first director of the federal Women's Bureau in Ottawa and she remained in that position for 12 years until her retirement from public service in 1967.

In that time she was known and recognized from coast-to-coast. Since retirement there has been little or nothing about her in the news.

That doesn't mean Marion Royce is tucked away somewhere in an Ottawa apartment, living out her days in seclusion.

No indeed! At 73, this remarkable woman is still active — working one-fifth time as a research associate at the Ontario Institute for Studies in Education.

In it there is an announcement that the bureau celebrated a 20th anniversary in September.

With that announcement there appears an article about Marion Royce "in recognition of her invaluable contribution to the Women's Bureau during her tenure as director for more than half its existence."

Regarding that one-fifth time work she is doing at the moment, the article says "she is being paid for one-fifth time, although her hours on the job are considerably more."

Then it explains she is working on a project of historial documentation of women and education in Ontario.

When she came to the bureau, Marion Royce already had an enviable background. She had been principal of a private girls' school in Toronto, and before that had worked in 20 countries for the World YWCA.

She had taken part in the United Nations Commission on the Status of Women and participated in activities sponsored by the International Labor Organization.

The staff of the bureau was small, and it remained small throughout Miss Royce's tenure.

Nevertheless, it wasn't long until in collaboration with the economics and research branch, it had embarked upon a first research project — a survey of married women in employment.

During the next dozen or so years, the Women's Bureau continued to publish studies covering a range of topics, including vocational training, maternity leave, continuing education, day-care services and career opportunities.

During the Royce term main focus of the work reflected the changing situation of women workers.

"Initial concern was centred on the great influx of married women into the labor force but later issues, such as part-time employment, which was not a common practice during the early years of the bureau, began to require attention."

In one of the first speeches given by the new director, she expressed exactly what she thought about equal pay for equal work: that it was sheer justice.

At that time there was no equal pay legislation at the federal level.

Maternity leave and benefits were also great concerns. Maternity leave had been recognized by the International Labor Organization as early as 1919 but only one province in Canada, British Columbia, had maternity leave legislation at the time the bureau was established.

Today, Marion Royce still transmits her concern for social justice, not only for women, but for all individuals. She has never lost her interest in the situation of women at work, nor her concern for women and girls who are still going into traditional female occupations.

In this connection the Women at Work article quotes her as saying, "This is one problem that we just can't give up on. I don't think people should be pushed into one thing or another but the economic emancipation of women is really most important.

"There is also a kind of freedom that goes beyond economic emancipation and what I wish most for women more than anything else is that we can move out of our narrow outlook and face other issues, give leadership in other areas.

"This kind of emancipation will happen when women feel more secure as individuals. Then they can go beyond themselves."

The article concludes with "Marion Royce, through her leadership, not only at the Women's Bureau, but in her many other jobs, is a fine example of what that kind of emancipation can do."

That was fully recognized in 1971 when this outstanding Canadian woman was awarded the Order of Canada Medal of Service.

In part, the citation read: "For her services in the fields of education and labor, particularly as they relate to women."

That fact should never be forgotten.

Ready For Combat

FORT CAMPBELL, Ky. (AP) — The law prohibits women from drawing combat assignments in the United States armed forces, but if the law is changed, Penny Hartley will be ready.

This week Miss Hartley, an army private, became the first woman to complete the 101st Airborne Division's rugged air-assault course.

Miss Hartley had to hike five miles on a forced march in two hours, run two miles in 16½ minutes, pass a written examination, do 37 situps and 33 pushups in one minute, climb a troop ladder into an airborne helicopter, and rappell off a 40-foot tower.

Doing the Town

With DOROTHY FRASER

The stuffed menagerie . . .

Doting grandmas, fond aunts . . . or anyone else who has a young child on her Christmas list . . . and would like to give something special and memorable in the way of a toy . . . take our advice and visit Wilson's Junior Shop . . . where we swear you'll lose your heart, just as we did the other day! . . . you've never seen such gorgeous stuffed toys . . . positively enchanting! . . . Most are from Merry Thought of England . . . of which there's nothing better . . . and quite a number are really pyjama cases . . . (we STILL have one of these . . . a dog given to us in our childhood, now sitting on our bed!) . . . Anyway, among the pyjama toys you'll find Ferdinand the Bull, complete with velvet horns . . . a soulful spaniel . . . a snooty poodle . . . a pussy cat . . . a gloriously sassy monkey . . . and other beasties which have probably escaped our eagle eye! . . . There are Teddy bears galore . . . from little wee ones to a great big Teddy larger than many a small child! . . . Tigers, kangaroos with baby in pouch . . . frogs . . . elephants, donkeys, lady bugs, tortoises, hippos . . . raffish donkey on rubber-tired wheels for a child to run around on, and an obliging tiger for him to sit on! . . . Besides all this stuffed menagerie, there are fascinating character dolls by Peggy Nisbet and Jay . . . Little Bo-Peep with a wooden head is among the former . . . with Elizabeth I, Prince Philip and dolls in national costumes of French provinces, etc., Raggedy Annes and Andys . . . Golliwogs . . . Small cuddly toys for babes in arms . . . All these and more at . . . W & J Wilson Limited, 1221 Government St., 383-7177 and 1210 Newport, 592-2821.

How to move in your cape, once you own one, will require practice but it's well worth the effort!

Gift-giving made easy! . . .

We were chatting with Wyn Sinclair over a cup of coffee at Miss Frith's the other day when he told us about a service which even WE didn't know about! . . . It seems that if you live out of town (and you people from Up-Island. Do please take note of this!) . . . all you need do if you need some new clothes . . . or would like to buy some Christmas gifts . . . is phone or write Mrs. Westgage at Miss Frith's . . . tell her (or one of the other knowledgeable sales ladies) what you'd like . . . and chances are your things can be put on a bus and speeded off to you that very same night! . . . In the case of clothes, you'll probably be sent several garments to choose from! . . . Isn't this a wonderful service? . . . As for Christmas gift items, why, the sky's the limit! . . . You can get everything from a simple pair of panty hose to a real fur coat! . . . Just to mention some of the gift ideas which caught our eye the other day . . . Handbags . . . gloves . . . scarves . . . umbrellas . . . sweaters . . . jewellery . . . blouses (a really beautiful selection for both day and evening!) . . . Sportswear, lounging pyjama sets and other types of loungewear . . . glittery evening purses and stoles . . . wallets . . . real mink hats . . . Plus all sorts of other things to delight the feminine heart! . . . Moreover, Miss Frith's make everything so easy for you! . . . They'll gift wrap your purchases for free . . . deliver them to your office . . . if you're a man and don't want the little woman to know what she's getting ahead of time . . . And if your gift isn't right . . . they'll be delighted to exchange it after Christmas . . . How can you possibly go wrong when you shop at . . . Miss Frith Fashions, 1619 Douglas St., 383-7181.

They're new at Mundays . . .

We've coveted a pair of Wallabees ever since we borrowed our sister-in-law's last summer and discovered their miraculous comfort . . . So when we heard on Monday that Munday's had at last received their long-awaited shipment of Wallabees from Ireland, we dashed in and got fitted before the rush starts . . . but more about these Wallabees later . . . First we want you to know about the new dressy models of d'Antonelli shoes which are also newly arrived at Munday's . . . u.e. to wear with your dressy holiday clothes, there's a lovely dressy soft suede pump with a lace vamp . . . as appropriate with a dressy short dress as with a more formal long one . . . This comes in either black or brown, and costs $33 . . . Some smart black and brown velvet bags which have just come in go very nicely with this shoe . . . Just $15 . . . A lovely gift for your husband to give you for Christmas would be the genuine alligator lizard pump . . . brown with matching calf binding . . . priced at $50 with matching handbag at $75 . . . An elegant set it ever we saw one! . . . Another dressy shoe by d'Antonelli is black or brown kid with open back and sides, closed toe . . . $33 . . . (You'll be seeing a lot of open-backed shoes around this winter!) . . . And now to get back to those incomparable Wallabees . . . There's the moccassin style in sand or brown suede at $37 . . . Ditto in brown leather, at $40 . . . And a plain toe style in brown or navy suede, also $37 . . . These walking shoes have a special padded insole and crepe wedge sole . . . and if you're a dedicated walker you'll find them sheer heaven! . . . Munday's, 1203 Douglas St., 383-2211.

"Pants are not passe. I don't believe you can have a complete wardrobe without them." . . . Pauline Trigere says.

Star bright . . . shine tonight . . .

Of all seasons of the year . . . this is the one when every woman worthy of the name wants to feel pampered . . . and terrifically "special" when she's doing the party bit! . . . Lovely, relaxed clothes . . . perhaps with some festive sparkle . . . to put her in a happy holiday mood . . . not to mention making her LOOK delectable! . . . We saw some after-five dresses in Eaton's this week which will take you anywhere with aplomb . . . add glamour to your at-home entertaining . . . There's a two-piece dress with long navy polyester sheer skirt and a pullover top in navy and metallic thread done in small squares . . . It has long sleeves, scoop neck . . . and a separate navy chiffon scarf which you can tie around your waist . . . drape around your neck, or let hang as a floating panel . . . same model in brown, one of this season's great colors! . . . Then there's a long acrylic and wool very fine boucle knit . . . sleeveless, with a V front and back . . . trimmed with a wide open-work band . . . Same openwork forms the matching stole . . . A delicious pale green, or a delicate shade of shrimp in this . . . Another long dress . . . this one 100% wool . . . comes in either white or aqua . . . It's a two-piecer with wide flared skirt, square neck with yoke, tie belt and rows of stitching for detailing . . . If you've decided to go the short route once in a while, there's a lovely two-piece dress of apricot polyester jersey . . . The skirt is accordion pleated all around, and the pullover top has long raglan sleeves drawn in at the wrists with elastic . . . waist cinched with a tie belt . . . All these dresses have just arrived . . . Eaton's Townhouse, 382-7141, loc. 367.

Flowering sleeves, ruffles and uneven dipper skirts will be rife next spring.

For your relaxed hours at home . . .

If you were young enough to write a letter to Santa . . . what's one of the first things you'd ask him for? . . . We're willing to make a bet that it would be a new dressing gown or robe . . . regardless of HOW many you may now have hanging in your closet! . . . Somehow receiving a new gown seems to be part of a merry Christmas . . . and we've noticed that it's one of the gifts men most enjoy giving to their favorite ladies! . . . What we're leading up to, of course, is that Wilson's have a fine selection of dressing gowns which should be viewed now while the pick of the crop is still intact! . . . There are Vivellas . . . just warm enough to keep away the chill yet not too warm for apartment dwellers . . . and eminently washable, of course . . . in the classic wraparound style, and pretty paisley designs . . . Others with V necks, buttoning down the front and drawn high under the bust with a satin tie . . . Border print designs, also buttoning down the front, with high tie necks . . . and collared, zip-fronted gowns, easy to get in and out of . . . lovely to wear! . . . There are elegant quilted long Hong Kong gowns in solid colors . . . blue, turquoise, tangerine, white, gold, green . . . Terry gowns . . . one style embossed, with silk rope tie belt, the other a gaily colored cattan type . . . These terry robes, by the way, will do double duty . . . as appropriate around the pool as in the boudoir . . . Great if you're going cruising or travelling south . . . There are lovely vocama gowns, delightful fluffy puff-ions with floral designs . . . every last one of them beautifully washable! . . . And to foot any of these . . . Moriand's real sheepskin slippers in gold, sky, yellow, pink, red, fawn, flame, heather and stone . . . Wonderfully warm and comfy! . . . W. & J. Wilson Limited, 1221 Government St., 383-7177 and 1210 Newport Ave., 592-2821.

Make your holiday hair appointments now! . . .

While December is just now starting upon us . . . it's not a minute too soon to make your Christmas and New Year's hair appointments at the House of Glamour . . . because if you've ever frequented this outstandingly popular beauty salon . . . you know just how busy it can get . . . especially around holiday time! . . . So decide what you're going to need in the way of "beautifying" during the month ahead and pick up the phone first thing Monday and get your appointments set, so as to avoid disappointments . . . Especially if you need a new perm or color job is this important . . . and we might mention that this is the season you should be thinking of doing something new and different with your hair . . . Getting yourself a glamorous holiday look to match the busy holiday season! . . . Did you know that the latest thing in tinting is called "hair painting"? . . . It's actually done with a brush . . . simply highlighting your hair so you look as if you'd been out basking in the sun all summer! We like the sound of this, and think it would be a fine thing to try . . . easier and more effective than streaking! . . . Charles, Ralph, Anna Lies, Jackie, Nancy and Pam are all experts at hair painting . . . as well as every phase of hair cutting, coloring and styling . . . So if you don't already have a favorite, you can't go wrong asking for any one of these talented stylists . . . And, of course, Danny Hanal on Fridays or Saturdays! . . . If you're at a loss what to give someone for Christmas, do consider a H. of G. Gift Certificate . . . available in $5, $10 and $20 denominations . . . and good to pay for any service the shop offers, or any product they sell . . . Pick one up at . . . House of Glamour, 1175 Douglas St., 386-6188.

Eaton's are playing Santa Claus to Newlyweds . . .

We hear that Eaton's have handed out literally hundreds of free gifts . . . not to mention Bridal Shower gift packs worth over $18 each . . . to brides-to-be and happy couples . . . over the past couple of years . . . but we also hear that some people just can't believe all this largesse is really being given away free . . . Well, we repeat it once again . . . and swear on a stack of bibles if necessary . . . There are absolutely NO strings attached to these gifts . . . Nothing to buy . . . nothing to sign! . . . If you're getting married . . . or know someone who is . . . just fill in a Bridal shower coupon and deposit it in one of the boxes you'll find in the linen, Hostess Shop, furniture dept. and Bridal Registry . . . The bride will then receive an invitation to visit Eaton's Bridal Registry where she'll be given TWO free gifts . . . A Bride's Note Book and a Household Encyclopedia . . . and invited to fill in a preference list of wedding gifts she'd like to receive . . . Once the wedding's over, the newlyweds will get a further invitation to pick up their Bridal Shower Gift Pack . . . a big box containing more than 40 top quality name products worth over $18 . . . They don't have to buy a single solitary thing . . . much less place themselves under any obligation to Eaton's . . . So don't procrastinate . . . get that coupon in and put yourself on the receiving end of some mighty nice gifts! Eaton's Bridal Registry, 382-7141, Loc. 373.

Gift Clothes-Horse

DEAR ABBY: My wife (I'll call her Ruth) has a sister I'll call Peggy. Peggy's husband is loaded with money, and Peggy spends a fortune on clothes.

Ruth and Peggy wear the same size, so Peggy sends Ruth boxes of dresses, coats and shoes that she's tired of. All the stuff is just like new, and Ruth looks like a million dollars in them.

Maybe I shouldn't feel this way, Abby, but it bothers me when I see my wife all dressed up in her sister's clothes. Although I can't afford to buy my wife the kind of clothes Peggy sends her, she wouldn't exactly go around in rags if she dressed in clothes that were within our income.

I've come awfully close to asking Ruth not to accept any more clothes from her sister, but I'm not sure it's the thing to do. I suppose it's selfish of me, Abby, but a guy can't help how he feels. What do you think? Poor Working Stiff.

Dear Stiff—I think you should tell your wife what you've told me. Talk it over, and maybe you can reach an agreeable compromise. You're right, a guy can't help how he feels, and I, for one, can understand your feelings.

DEAR ABBY: I am constantly amazed at some of the "problems" you are asked to solve. Many could be solved if the person had one ounce of common sense and a half an ounce of guts.

Being afraid to offend "friends" who habitually impose on you is sheer imbecility. Those "friends" have ultra thick skins.

The only way to handle them is to inquire: "By the way, have you ever considered minding your own business?" Believe me, it works. You can't offend such people. On the contrary, they'll respect you for not being a push-over.

So many people think that they have to be "nice" at all costs. It's especially true of Americans. People of other lands (including my native little Netherlands) do not worry about being "popular" so much as taking the right action, and being respected for doing so.

If you use my letter, please don't put my name in the paper.

Thank you for reading this. — Reader.

DEAR READER: And thank you for writing it.

DEAR ABBY: In response to that mother whose child got hysterical when she saw the doctor coming toward her in a white coat, you said the doctor was guilty of unprofessional conduct and deserved a reprimand from his county medical society. Bull!

DEAR N.J.: Before you reach for that tongue depressor, let's review the bidding: The doctor enters the examining room and is greeted by a screaming, hysterical little girl. The doctor gruffly says, "Who needs this," and stomps out of the room. He returns to address the mother in a nasty tone, "Take her home, and don't bring her back unless she's really sick!"

Many children are frightened at the sight of a man (or woman) in a white coat because of a painful previous experience. They aren't "spoiled brats," they are sensitive little people, and deserve to be treated with kindness and understanding.

DEAR ABBY: Is there any legal limit to the number of times a person can get married?—Counting

DEAR COUNTING: Not if you remember to get divorced between "I do's."

ADVERTISE YOUR

GOOD THINGS in Victoria's Daily Newspapers

YOUR HOROSCOPE

By SYDNEY OMARR

Forecast for Sunday, Dec. 1.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Stick to basics — adhere to quality. Don't compromise on principles. Take time to explain position to one in authority. If this you do, you gain ally. Otherwise, you create needless problems. Accent security, responsibility and an understanding of property values.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Emphasis is on short journey, message, call which could change preconceived notions. You finish rather than begin — and you will hear woes of relative. Be kind without being foolish. Be a good listener without "taking sides." Message will become increasingly clear!

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Check costs. Don't be shy about driving a hard bargain. Be independent enough to get ideas across in dynamic, meaningful manner. Leo, Aquarius persons are in picture. Pioneering spirit should prevail. You will obtain needed material.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Lunar cycle is such that your timing strikes bull's-eye. Now is time to trust your judgment, follow intuition and make direct contact with people important to your welfare. Aquarius, Leo individuals figure promniently.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): You could be invited to "special" function. Be agreeable, social and willing to expand horizons. You might meet a glamorous individual who lends added spice to your life. Gemini, Sagittarius could be featured.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Emphasize willingness to effect fair compromise. Extend hand of friendship. What begins as a mild relationship could be transformed into something meaningful. Some of your "romantic notions" could become realities. You will be loved!

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Open dialogue with professional superior. Get views on record. Be flexible without abandoning principles. Gemini, Virgo could be in picture. Individual you care for will prove that you are on right track. Accept special or overtime assignment.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Home or domestic adjustment is indicated. Taurus, Libra persons could be involved. Long-range planning is featured. Discussion of travel or vacation plans are also likely to be on agenda. Catch up on corresponidence. Open lines of communication.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Be wary in connection with those who claim to know how best to spend or invest your money. Protect personal interests. Delegating duties would not be wise at this time. Give more attention to partner, mate.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Spotlight is on publicity, public relations, better relations with partner, mate. You find true meaning of co-operation. You discover that going it alone has deficits as well as assets. Cancer individual figures prominently.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Work associate has problem and confides it. Be sympathetic, mature, helpful — don't be involved beyond your means. Hold tight to independence. Refuse to get involved in scheme with one who skirts the law.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Favorable Moon aspect coincides with romantic situation which may be "getting out of hand." Make decision which affects future. Key is to be selfish, to look out for your own welfare. This actually means having self-esteem. If this you do, party in question will appreciate you all the more!

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are direct, frank, independent and passionate. You are not easy to get along with, but even your adversaries respect you. Leo, Aquarius individuals are drawn to you.

Forecast for Monday, Dec. 2

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Get on solid legal ground. Define boundaries. Be aware of values, appraisals. Finish task at hand. Settle differences with partner or mate. Find better means of communication, distribution, another Aries is in picture.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Some relatives could be inclined to argue. Maintain independent stance. You do have right to live your own life. Explain position in reasonable manner. After that, relax. Refuse to be drawn into senseless conflict. A new start is on horizon—and that's good!

GEMENI (May 21-June 20): Your hunch pays dividends. Heed inner voice. One who aided, taught you in past now has something else of value to impart. Know it and be receptive. Aquarian is in picture. Accent is on collection, payments.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): One who lacks experience could try to tell you how to handle business transaction. Maintain balance—and sense of humor. Key is to diversify. Otherwise, you will be spinning your wheels, going in circles. Sagittarius, Gemini could be involved.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Check fine points, details. Read between the lines and look behind the scenes. Money discussion is on agenda—relatives are involved. You may be confronted with a now-or-never situation. Key is to take practical, conservative course.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Money and friendship could present a problem. Avoid dilemma by stating position in frank, concise terms. This may be difficult but is beneficial in long run. You are asked some perplexing questions. Answers are available—if you do some reading.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): A wish is fulfilled, but circumstances may not entirely please you. Domestic adjustment is involved—and so is a partial compromise. Do some comparison shopping with regard to special or luxury item involving family comfort, entertainment.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Discern difference between idealism and wishful thinking. Light touch is appropriate. Means avoid heavy-handed procedures. What you need can be obtained by correspondence, calls. Do some personal checking. Take nothing for granted. Establish line of communication.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): You asked for more attention from member of opposite sex—now you get it! Involvement is accented. Nothing halfway—all or nothing. Know it—don't start anything unless you intend to finish it. Get priorities in order, especially those involving budget.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): You do best now be completing instead of initiating action. Friends, although well-meaning, may not have complete picture at hand. Know it and smooth over rough edges. Accent is on public relations in connection with legal green light.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): New approach to philosophical question is indicated—and necessary. Stop fighting about how many angels can fit on the head of a pin. Concentrate, instead, on the quality of angels and the practical uses of pins.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Co-operate with Aquarian, you gain insights, despite unusual circumstaces. Money and emotional involvement mingle—you make important self-discoveries. You find yourself in sense of being able to impress your own style.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY September was an important month for you this year, especially in terms of production, income, responsibility and marriage. You are loyal to family, have tendency to brood and you draw to you Capricorn, Cancer individuals.

Free For The Asking

By HARRIET HART

As you know, if cancer is detected in its early stage, the chances of successful treatment are very promising. This is why the Canadian Cancer Society recommends that all women make it a habit to examine their breasts every month and to go to their doctor for a periodic Pap Test.

The 4-page folder "Have a Pap Test. Do a monthly breast self-examination" ("Subissez un test Pap. Pratiquez mensuellement l'antoexamen des seins") explains that a Pap Test is a simple means of cancer detection. Your doctor simply gathers some cells from the fluid in your vagina and has them examined under a microscope. If you are over 20, have this Test as often as your doctor recommends it. It is completely painless and only takes a couple of minutes.

The folder also describes and illustrates the procedure of breast self-examination (BSE). The purpose of BSE is to search for any lump in the breasts.

According to the folder, the best time to do this is shortly after your period. Lie on your bed with a folded towel under your right shoulder and your right hand under your head. Then examine your right breast with your fingertips. Be sure to examine the entire breast and also the armpit. Repeat the same procedure on your other breast.

Some women find the BSE more convenient if they do it in the bathtub.

For the folder contact your local chapter of the Canadian Cancer Society. The address is in the telephone directory.

Some Novel Approaches To Giving at Christmas

By MICHAEL ROBBINS

Making a present for someone does not mean giving on the cheap; it means giving of your time and thought. If your list of recipients is long, there may not be enough of you and your resources to go around. So you might confine your special efforts to the benefit of one or two special people.

Not for the short of breath or short of time (or short of imagination), these suggestions are for energetic persons determined to rise above the usual Christmas present procedure of standing at the local end of the consumerama assembly-line, clutching credit cards in one hand and wrapping foil in the other on or about Dec. 24.

If you and yours are fully-equipped members of the prerecorded generation, consider cassettes as stocking stuffers. How about tapes of favorite sounds? To please an aviation buff, you would visit a small airline or air charter service and record the gutty, lumpy idle of a good old DC-3, or go to a larger field and catch the snapping thunder of a 707 takeoff.

For a person frazzled by the sirens and bleeps of city streets and in need of tranquil "white" sound, try taping some soothing natural music, like the ocean rollers breaking on some rocky shore. Head out to a nearby mountain on a crisp day for the rush of wind in the ridgetop pines.

If sound effects don't seem appropriate, try writing an account of some special time that you and the lucky recipient of these efforts spent together, like a weekend in Vancouver, a day of fishing for steelhead, a bicycle day in the park, or even just relive a splurge dinner, date. Then record your own reminiscences on the tape.

Of course, if your tape gear is of musical quality, you might tape the songs of a favorite group, or tape a well-liked program on the radio.

Create a visual experience, instead of an aural one. Make or have made a presentation print of a favorite photograph. Perhaps there is a favorite among the pictures in the life photography series or some other favored book. Write photographer or author or publisher and buy a print. Then frame it yourself.

Because of the costs, few persons bother to have a cherished but tiny color slide converted to a large color print. But an 8x10 or even a 16x20 (if the original slide is sharp enough) of a special place or face or scene can form the basis of a welcome gift.

You might create the whole experience from scratch by photographing the horse, evening view, country road or family that means the most. Or have it done; freelance photographers are always looking for work.

Another kind of visual experience can be restored, even though you may not be an artist yourself. Locate an artist through a gallery, the Yellow Pages, or the art department of a local school, and commission a drawing or painting of some thing or person that is near and dear: their own rowhouse, cat or restored 1947 Hudson. For that matter, the art needn't be on paper or canvas: if your friend has one of those cast-iron Chippendale bathtubs with the clan feel, you could commission a painter to transform the tub into a lion or tiger or bear.

One angle to pursue is to present someone with a "Cope Kint," helping them along the path toward freedom from the technical mystery-based rip-off. For example, here's how to avoid a person who wishes to deal successfully with an automobile: Fill one under-the-seat-size canvas bag with hand tools, including a medium-size regular and a medium-size Phillips-head screwdriver, an 8-inch or 10-inch adjustable wrench, good slip-joint pliers, a spark plug wrench, perhaps some combination wrenches in the ½-inch to ¾-inch range, a flashlight and a trouble light. A good service manual will dispel some of the mystery and guide repairs and maintenance. Include a tuneup kit with points, condenser and spark plugs, so the work and the learning might begin with a specific project. If you want to hedge, include the telephone number of a reliable mechanic.

Cookies That Improve With Age

By MARY MOORE

When you are 3000 miles from home and you are served the best cookies you ever tasted by your hostess what do you do? You ask for the recipe.

My hostess is a very dear friend. I had not been home more than a week before the carefully typed recipe came in the morning mail. By afternoon I had bought the ingredients and by night had my cookie tin full of them.

They are called Ghoraibi and they are Lebanese Cookies. They will remind you a little of our thumbprint or Swedish cookies but are more delicate. They call for only five ingredients. This batch makes 6 dozen and they keep remarkably well—actually improve with age so you can make them now for Christmas.

GHORAIBI—LEBANESE COOKIES

(6 doz.)

NOTE: These cookies do not call for any salt. Taste the dough after it is mixed to see if you would prefer to add ¼ teaspoon salt.

1 c. unsalted butter
1¼ c. sifted icing sugar
1 egg yolk
2 teaspoons lemon juice
2 c. twice sifted cake (or cake and pastry) flour
pistachio halves (OR halved blanched almonds) flour

Cream the unsalted butter with the icing sugar until very light and fluffy—at least 10 minutes in your beater on "high". Beat in the egg yolk and lemon juice. add the flour. If the dough is too soft to handle spread it out in the bowl and chill it for 1 hour in the refrigerator or one-half hour in Freezer. Form into small balls NOT MORE than ONE-INCH in diameter. Place 2½" apart on greased cookie sheets. (I used four.) Decorate each cookie with three pistachio nut halves in the shape of a three-leaf clover pressing down each ball slightly as you decorate. Bake at 325 deg. Fahr.—about 10 minutes but WATCH THEM — they must not be overbaked. They should be a pale sand color with pale gold rim. DO NOT BURN, EVEN ONE. Let stand on pan for 1 minute befort lifting CAREFULLY with spatula to cake racks to cool. These are delicate cookies so when you store them in your cookie tin be sure to put wax paper between each layer.

NOTE: If you cannot buy pistachios in your town use one-half blanched almond on each cookie.

HUGE PLANTS HORSE SENSE

CAMBERLEY, England (CP) — Edward Purver claims to have grown the world's tallest sunflower at his Surrey home and says the success of the plant, measuring 19 feet 2 inches high, is all due to the New Forest ponies. He made a special trip there to collect manure before planting.

Alvarez-Welch Medical Report

By DR. WALTER ALVAREZ

Thousands of people consult heart specialists when they begin to get spells in which the heart misses an occasional beat. Commonly the beat that follows the missed one is unusually strong, probably because the heart got a little longer rest than usual.

Many years ago, the world's then most eminent heart specialist, Sir James MacKenzie, wrote that during his many years of experience with heart diseases he had found that no one died of missing beats. In his splended big book on heart disease he says "The patient must get used to them."

My father had brief spells of such missing beats for 31 years, until he died at 84 of pneumonia. During all those years he had good health and worked very hard seeing many patients seven days a week.

I began to get my three-hour spells of missing beats in my 50s, and I still have them in my late 80s, with no symptoms of weakening of the heart.

All of this should be very encouraging to all those people who have occasional spells of missing beats. I have tried to learn what brings on one of my spells, but as yet I have had no luck.

BURNING MOUTH

Occasionally someone asks me why he has a burning mouth, and what to do for it. In an older person, I might suspect a little stroke, in which a tiny artery in the brain plugged up.

Now I read that at the Mayo Clinic, doctors studied 19 patients with a burning mouth, and 12 were better when they stopped using their chewing gum, toothpaste and mouthwash.

Some people complain of a canker sore on their tongue or the inside of the cheek. I used to get a painful, week-long sore in my mouth whenever I ate chocolate. Other people get such sores from eating pineapples or strawberries. The person will need to do a little "home detective work" in order to find just what is causing the trouble.

People say to me: "I keep reading that everyone ought to get a yearly examination for cancer, but how can I be bothered to do that?" And I tell them that ever since 1926 when I became a senior consultant at the Mayo Clinic I have had a thorough examination each year, with x-ray examinations of my lungs, my stomach, and my bowel.

Today I am pleased to see in a release from the American Cancer Society (219 East 42nd St., N.Y. 10017) that a new Gallup poll has shown that the number of women who recently went for a Pap test (which detects the common type of cancer of the neck of the womb) was 52 per cent, instead of the 23 per cent in 1963. Some 78 per cent of the women said they had had at least one Pap test.

There have also been moderate gains in the number of persons who have gone for other cancer detection tests — chest x-ray, skin examination, colon and rectum exams (proctos), and breast examinations. Very encouraging is the news that recently 67 per cent of women have had a breast examination, while in 1963 only 43 per cent were examined.

The Gallup study showed that many more Americans are having periodic medical checkups. The American Cancer Society urges an annual medical checkup, and the Gallup study found that two-thirds of all adults said they have at some time "gone to a doctor for a complete physical checkup, even though they were feeling all right." This compares with 57 per cent in 1963.

DRINKING TOO MUCH? WORRIED? WANT TO QUIT?

In 25 days it will be Christmas. For most people it is a time of joy and, for many, an occasion for rededication.

But for the unfortunate sufferer who is dedicated to drink and for his or her family it is often a time of knife-twisting agony.

There is the period of apprehension which leads up to the holiday season and the question: "Will this year be another mess?"

This dread is often accompanied by warnings and threats on one hand and desperate and entirely sincere promises on the part of the alcoholic or problem drinker.

Then there is Christmas, before and after, which is usually a disaster, minor or major, and afterwards, the period of remorse and recrimination.

Alcoholics often hate Christmas. It is a time of worry, anxiety and dreadful remorse, of frustrated and unhappy wives and hurt children. So painful is it that years after they have stopped drinking some alcoholics are unable to recapture the spirit.

We have made few direct appeals in this series of messages, of which this is the last, but if you are dreading Christmas because of the drunkenness you know is going to happen and the damage you are going to do to those you love, remember there are 25 days between now and then and, in that time, you can take the first steps toward recovery.

Christmas can still be a happy one.

If you are worried and sincerely want to quit drinking call us at 383-1633.

Theatre Upstages Budget

By RONALD THOMSON

LONDON (AP) — Britain's new National Theatre, arising spectacularly by the Thames River, faces a crisis over its building and its budget.

Critics say the building is too big and the budget isn't nearly big enough.

Anxiety over the $28-million project has been widely reported in British newspapers and magazines, but director Peter Hall insists that the National Theatre will never become a national folly.

Hall, a respected theatrical administrator as well as a successful producer of plays, films and opera, was chosen to realize the 200-year-old dream of a permanent playhouse for British stagecraft at its best.

But he has been beset by construction delays, labor problems and worries that the venture will be overwhelmed by its own size.

Hall cannot even be sure that the theatre will be ready for its scheduled opening next April 23, the most probable date of William Shakespeare's birth in 1564.

NEAR GLOBE SITE

The project is nearing completion on the south bank of the Thames within a mile of the site of the open-roofed Globe Playhouse where Shakespeare's masterworks were produced in the reign of Queen Elizabeth I.

Hall, 43, who took over the national company from Lord Laurence Olivier last year, has said the project will be "the biggest bombshell to hit the English theatre since the Globe."

It has been designed to house three separate theatres with a total of 2,465 seats, seven bars, a restaurant, two self-service buffets and parking for 415 cars.

Behind the footlights will be 135 air-conditioned dressing rooms, two large rehearsal rooms and several smaller ones, and spacious workshops.

The famed Old Vic theatre, which has housed the national company for more than 10 years, seats only 800. "Up to six months ago I thought that having three theatres was wonderful because they combined to make it a real centre for the nation's theatres," Hall said in an interview.

"But now, of course, I'm thinking . . . if only there was just one auditorium and a little experimental place."

HIT BY AUSTERITY

Behind Hall's words lay the fear that it may be difficult, if not impossible, to fill the three auditoriums seven days a week at a time when Britain's politicians have warned the people to tighten their belts in the gravest economic crisis since the Second World War.

Inflation has boosted the estimated bill to the taxpayer of the National Theatre from $18 million to $28 million in five years. It was originally scheduled for completion in 1973, but delays multiplied as costs zoomed.

Now there are published esimates that it may cost $8 million annually to keep the three-theatre repertory going with such stars as Sir John Gielgud, Sir Ralph Richardson, Paul Scofield, Albert Finney and Dame Peggy Ashcroft.

Even if every seat in the National Theatre were filled every night, the takings would cover only about half the outgoings, according to stage pundits.

At present, performing at the Old Vic, the national company receives an annual public subsidy of around £500,000 ($1.15 million). In its lavish tors say, it would need at new home, some commentaleast £2 million from state funds to be comfortable.

And in a new era of British austerity there can be no guarantee that the money will be forthcoming.

'Suspicious' Contraceptive Losing Favor

VANCOUVER (CP) — After 70 years, the intra-uterine device (IUD) as a birth control method is losing favor among patients and doctors alike.

Although developers have promoted the IUD as being a far superior contraceptive to the diaphragm, some doctors now say flatly that it isn't so.

New York population control expert Dr. Christopher Tietze, who developed a program for evaluation of IUDs, has said that "an IUD is no more effective than a diaphragm or a condom, when these are properly used."

Vancouver physician Dr. William Seidelman of Reach Clinic says the emphasis in Dr. Tietze's statement is on "proper use" of the diaphragm.

An increasing number of women are switching back from the IUD to the diaphragm, which has no damaging side effects, he said.

"We're suspicious as hell of the IUDs," said Dr. Carol Herbert, also of Reach Clinic. "We make sure that women who want them are hyperaware of the dangers."

LACK EXPERIENCE

Dr. Fred Bryans, professor of medicine at University of British Columbia and head of Vancouver General Hospital's obstetrics and gynecology department, said some doctors are inexperienced in dealing with IUDs.

Perforation of the uterus is one hazard, Dr. Bryans said, "and it all depends on the skill with which the IUD is inserted.

"Doctors don't get much opportunity to learn how to insert the IUD," he said. "Each case is different and a lot depends on the size and shape of the uterus.

"We can't teach every undergrad to insert IUDs. Students do graduate (from University of British Columbia school of medicine) who have never inserted an IUD."

Although statistics are incomplete, the United States Food and Drug Administration estimates that nearly nine million IUDs have been marketed since 1966 in the U.S. Of these, 2.2 million were the Dalkon shield device, which was taken off the market in June this year after being implicated in a number of fatal infections and septic abortions.

Canadian statistics on the actual use of IUDs are less complete than American figures, but distributors of the Dalkon shield said an estimated 127,000 units of that device alone were sold in Canada from 1970 until sales were suspended.

LITTLE DIFFERENCE

Dr. Herbert said she believes there is little difference in safety factors in various types of IUDs. "Variations on the shape of the IUD are strictly for sales," she said. "It's just like selling new cars.

"We still regard the IUD as an experimental device."

Dr. Seidelman said there is not yet enough available data on the Copper 7 and Copper T devices for physicians to evaluate their effectiveness, and he sees potential hazards in their use.

A 26-year-old Vancouver woman who was fitted with the Copper 7 said in an interview she had such severe reactions to the device—severe cramps, hemorrhaging and infection—that her doctor removed it two weeks after insertion.

HAD CRAMPS

Another Vancouver woman, a 28-year-old registered nurse, said she suffered "terrible cramps and backaches—such terrible discomfort that I couldn't sleep," after being fitted with an IUD.

She said the literature her doctor gave her on the IUD didn't point out the danger signs or tell a woman to check with her doctor.

Dr. Bryans said how the copper IUD works is not well understood, but it could be because the copper may cause a chemical reaction and release of enzymes that would interfere with implantation of the fertilized egg. Or the local inflafmatory reaction set up by the device may destroy the egg instead of the sperm.

He said the copper IUD has been designed to lower the conception rate and it appears to be a significant improvement, "but it still doesn't get rid of the hazards of IUDs."

U.S. OIL PRESSURE THREAT DENOUNCED

BEIRUT (AP) — U. S. Treasury Secretary William Simon says in an interview published here today that U.S. military interventiion to secure lower oil prices is "unthinkable and ridiculous."

But the Lebanese newspaper Daily Star quotes Simon as saying that the U.S. will push ahead for lower oil prices. The comments were made to a Daily Star editor in Washington.

Simon told the newspaper that King Faisal of Saudi Arabia "should be commended" because he "has been a leader in wisdom and courage and in understanding the danger that the higher prices of oil are causing for the world economy."

The U.S. is seekinig cooperation, and not confrontation with the oil-producing nations, Simon told the editor.

MUDROOM MULTI-USE

This little room, designed to fit beautifully on the back entry of almost any house, packs the convenience of a laundry area, mudroom, and extra bath, all into a very small space. Careful planning, both in space use and materials, makes a cleanup centre that almost runs itself. Plastic-finished hardboard on all exposed wall and cabinet surfaces defies dirt. There's ample storage space, but also a large open area of floor space for plenty of elbow room.

The plan at upper right shows how simple it is to add all the conveniences of a true utility room to the back of your house. All the components of an extra bath are here, plus a pleasant little entry porch and even a place to keep the garbage cans out of sight. Since the toilet and washer drains are near the house. You'll probably be able to tie into existing drains and vents to help cut down your plumbing bill.

For a more economical model of this room (lower right), you can leave out the toilet and a little of the storage space, turn the whole thing sideways, and attach it to your house as shown. You've still got plenty of floor space, plus most of the conveniences of the larger addition. You can probably heat either of these additions with a duct from your present system.

To order the utility mudroom pattern No. 479, send $3.00 cheque or money order to: DECO-PLANS, Victoria Times, P.O. Box 90, Boucherville, Quebec.

He Landed This Job

VANCOUVER (CP) — A crash landing in the last days of the Second World War helped bring Terrance Robert Watt to his new position as one of the three commissioers of the British Columbia Workers' Compensation Board.

Mr. Watt, 54, ex-RCAF flight lieutenant, lost the use of his left arm when his Spitfire was shot down over Germany in the last week of the war.

"We were strafing aèrodromes at this particualr time," Mr. Watt recalls, "and my aircraft got hit in the radiator with a machine-gun or rifle bullet.

"I had to find a place to land, so that's what I did, made a crash-landing.

"I came down in a farmer's field, but what appeared to be a hedgerow at the end of the field, was in fact, a growth over an accumulation of centuries of rocks.

"That's when the damage was done to my arm and my back, when, in general terms, I lost the use of this left arm."

Mr.Watt was taken prisoner of war, and was still in hospital when he was released.

He has minimal use of his left arm—"I can use it as a paperweight and I can hold a cigarette between a couple of the fingers" — but that is all.

WENT TO COLLEGE

After the war, he rejoined his wife in Vancouver, and still undergoing rehabilitation treament, went to University of British Columbia and graduated in 1949.

Most recently, Mr. Watt was with the Toronto industrial relations firm of Peat, Marwick and Partners.

"I joined a firm called Labor Relations Bureau, which subsequently became Management Research, a consulting firm in personnel work and industrial relations, and I was in that firm until 1966, when I sold my interest in it."

From there, Mr. Watt went to the federal department of manpower and immigration, a five-year stint first as director-general for the Prairie region and then the Ontario region.

"This particular appointment to the WCB interested me simply because of the challenge of the thing and I felt there was some kind of contribution I might be able to make based on my experience in the industrial relations field," Mr. Watt says.

"Again, I have a substantial interest in rehabilitation, as a result of the fact I've gone through a rehabilitation process myself. . ."

Getting Caught Is the Crime In Juvenile Delinquency Code

WINNIPEG (CP) — Hundreds of children in the toughest part of Winnipeg are growing up on a steady diet of crime.

Workers for the Children's Aid Society in the north-central part of the city tell of kindergarten-aged children who set fires, of seven-year-olds assaulting foster parents and of young girls turning to prostitution to finance glue-sniffing.

"Getting into trouble isn't frowned on. Getting caught is the crime."

Mr. Panson and his co-workers are aware of the many factors that lead to juvenile delinquency: Parents overwhelmed with their own problems, lack of family life at home or the difficulties facing rural or native people in adjusting to urban living.

At the same time, however, they feel the present rehabilitation system for juveniles is less than adequate.

"It's a game to these kids," said social worker Heather Martin. "The police pick them up and they go to the Youth Centre. The next day they get a lecture from a juvenile court judge and a ride home from a social worker who gives them the same lecture.

"I know of kids who've gotten into trouble just so they could be in the Youth Centre for the weekend dance."

Jim Pacey said delinquents in their mid-teens laugh at the courts, and he said the courts have to make good some of their threats to frequent offenders and concentrate preventive measures on the very young who are new to a life of crime.

Last year, city police apprehended 6,068 juveniles and about half of this number were detained for further action. Some have their cases dismissed in juvenile court, some are referred to the Children's Aid Society and some are fined or ordered to make restitution.

A small number of young offenders are raised to adult court or sent to training schools. About 14 per cent of the youngsters apprehended by police go on probation.

Despite the concerns expressed by Children's Aid Society workers, Lloyd Dewalt, director of probation services at the Manitoba Youth Centre in Winnipeg, said the juvenile court and rehabilitation system in the province is working reasonably well.

There hasn't been a controlled study of the system, he said, but studies in similar areas show as many as 80 per cent of the persons put on probation stay out of further trouble with the law, at least over a period of several years.

Mr. Dewalt said setbacks and relapses are an unfortunate but accepted part of medicine and perhaps the same kind of thinking should prevail in the field of rehabilitation of offenders.

"It places an impossible task on the system to expect a 'cure' in every case," he said.

Fine Wines Bloom Among Desert Cactus

TUCSON, Ariz. (UPI) — Pinot Noir Gamay, Cabernet Sauvignon wines produced in the lush, cactus-rich desert land of Southern Arizona?

It could happen.

A project designed to find ways to store water in the desert has produced varietal wines researchers say match or exceed some of their California brothers.

Dr. Gordon Dutt, a soils specialist at the University of Arizona, has spent 28 months on a grape-growing project near here.

"We were looking for ways to get supplemental water," he said.

"We were looking at water harvesting methods including using sodium chloride, common table salt, to seal the soils. That work led us to the grape growing project.

"We found the best method of producing water is to remove all vegetation and actually sterilize portions of the ground. The ground is sloped away to crop waterways where we grow the grapes."

The use of salt to seal the soil had been used in Roman times.

Growing grapes in the waters was Dutt's idea because grapes are low, deep water users, have a high value and can be stored.

"I think our early results are indicating that we may well be able to produce types of grapes that do not do well in California, in other words, the Mediterranean types of grapes," he said.

"The soil we have here in southern California is a red, desert soil, high in iron and unusual to be found in a desert climate because it basically is an acid soil where most of the California soils, except in mountain regions, are soils containing basic sales.

"For example, the grapes made to produce Chianti are of a set variety in Italy. However, these same grapes do very poorly in California mainly because they do not produce the color and acidity where the growing season is long enough to produce the sugar content.

"We have every reason to believe that these same grapes will do well here."

Dutt has had the most success with red grapes, producing wines of brilliant color and acidity. Although white varieties produced high yields, their acidity, a factor determining the sharpness of a wine, was poor.

"Currently there are no commercial groves of wine grapes in Arizona. The horticulturists have been saying for years here that we can not get enough sugar in our grapes. This is contrary to what is found in California.

"We put 12 varieties into the ground here and some of the generalities that hold in California do not hold here. For instance, The Pinot Noir grape, the grape of Burgundy, in California does well in the Napa Valley and northern, cooler regions of the state.

But by the time you get into the Sacramento Valley, you find the Pinot Noir does not develop color and at best you get a rose.

"We expected to find the same thing here. Much to our surprise we found that grapes such as Pinot Noir, Gamay, Cabernet Sauvignon develop excellent color."

Don't expect to see a rush of wine production coming out of Arizona, however.

"I think one of the reasons we have not had wine grapes here is that in the past people who have tried them have had the grapes destroyed by Texas root rot. I cannot believe that the early Spanish missions did not attempt to grow grapes here. I'm sure they did, but I'm just as certain that if they ran into Texas root rot they would have been wiped out.

"If we can solve this problem, and we have reasons now to believe we can, then we can have a successful wine industry here."

Possible solutions to the root rot problem are resistant root stocks and planting the vines at a higher elevation where the disease is not a factor, he said.

Fired Teamster Wins Suit

VANCOUVER (CP) — A Teamsters' Union member has received $12,000 in an out-of-court settlement of a dispute over his firing by Kas Bros. Ltd. of Burnaby, a ready-mix concrete company.

The settlement went to Waine Neufeld of Williams Lake. He had been dismissed from the company for incompetence and insubordination last December.

On June 29 an arbitration board decided the firing was too severe and replaced it with a one-month suspension. When Kask Bros. refused to rehire Neufeld, Teamsters Local 213 launched court action.

Jack Kask said the company agreed to settle for back pay to the date of firing, and $3,000 to the Teamsters to cover the union's legal costs.

Grandma Too Busy For Aches

OTTAWA (CP) — Old age could be an enjoyable experience if old people didn't, sit back and complain but managed to get involved. That would take their minds off their aches and pains, says 77-year-old Ida Olive.

"I hate complainers. there is really so much to do."

Mrs. Olive is a mother of seven, grandmother of 18 and great-grandmother of two. She retired at 66 from her stengorapher's job with the chaplain services of the federal government, and says that three-quarters of her time now is spent on senior citizen's work.

Although she has retired as secretary of the United Senior Citizen's of Ontario USCO she says she is busier than ever in their activities. "They know I like to be involved."

Ticking off the days of the week on her fingers, she noted that on Monday she had an afternoon session on a cablevision program, Coming of Age.

Tuesday she had a Spanish class and a club meeting, Wednesday and Thursday a recreation and parks conference.

Mrs. Olive can't wait for her senior citizen's work to ease up so she can get back to her ceramics classes at Carleton university, her knitting her books.

"I think an awful lot could be done in the way of educating seniors. We need more education to show them how happy they can be."

Mrs. Olive is planning a holiday to Spain. Her last holiday was two years ago in Florida.

"Don't tell me old people can't save and go places ... I've saved money and I'm going to Spain to spend it."

Summer this Winter in Southern Arizona!

Winters in southern Arizona are ludicrously misnamed. The days are sunny and warm, generally in the high 60s or 70s. Just the right kind of weather to melt a Canadian winter.

ACUPUNCTURE 'ONLY BY MDs'

OTTAWA (CP) — Health Minister Marc Lalonde told the Commons Friday that the government believes that the use of acupuncture in operations should be provided only by a doctor or under the supervision of a doctor.

He was replying to J. R. Holmes (PC — Lambton-Kent), who asked whether acupuncture is considered as a high priority by the health department.

Lalonde said the government has taken the lead "in attempting to clarify the position of acupuncture as a potentially useful health service in the Canadian context.

"We have sent missions to China, and Chinese acupuncturists are coming to Canada," he said.

But like other medical services, acupuncture came under provincial, not federal law.

It should be provided only by a doctor or under a doctor's supervision said Lalonde.

Queen Mary rests in state at Long Beach, California.

And she's a wax museum, a candy store, a souvenir stand, a convention centre, a sea shell shop, a jewelry store, a movie set, a bus stop, a rug store, fish 'n' chips stand and a wedding chapel.

Other than that though, the Queen Mary is the same old graceful lady, the queen of the sea, the world's largest ocean liner whose 81,000 gross tons of wood, brass and steel carried 2,114,000 paying passengers on sea voyages of yesteryear.

In September, 1867, her three bright orange stacks passed under New York City's Verrazano-Narrows Bridge for the final time. Then on Dec. 9, 1967, after 1,001 Atlantic crossings, the Queen Mary sailed her 3,794,017 nautical mile and moored here along Long Beach's long beaches.

Once she was the symbol of an era of unparralleled splendor. Then The Queen Mary was to be the symbol of a waterfront rejuvenation for the City of Long Beach, which paid $3.4 million to Cunard Lines for her.

Today, after almost seven years of financial storms, the Queen Mary rides in 43 feet of calm waters behind her own stone breakfront along Pier J at the foot of the Long Beach Freeway. She has been largely gutted, redecorated and rewired. Much of the ship has been parcelled out to various concessions. They are supervised by the city's Queen Mary Department, which is supervised by Capt. James Lynch, a submarine commander who only saw such ships in his periscope. There have been several lawsuits, discarded agreements, abandened leases, and refurbishing costs have risen from the original $9 million estimates to almost $60 million with one-third of the ship still undeveloped.

But today, the second anniversary of its opening as a landlinked hotel, several score travelers will register at the old purser's office for their first-class staterooms.

Others, with $3.75 will tour the ship, visit a museum on the Queen Mary's history and see some impressive exhibits designed by Jacques Cousteau and called the living sea. There, visitors can hear fish talking, touch various living sea inhabitants and view themselves as seen by several ocean creatures.

Almost 70 shipboard and dockside shops are open for business, including one with the sign: "Rugs, Imports and Frozen Bananas (On a Stick)." There are helicopter rides and eventually 20th Century-Fox, which filmed part of "The Poseidon Adventure" here, would like to build a marina and a Pleasure Island theme park astern of the Queen.

Off the port bow, construction workers already have laid the keel for a new Hilton hotel while across the Los Angeles River in downtown Long Beach, there are plans for an exhibit hall and another hotel.

"The Queen Mary," said Lynch, "was the catalyst. She put Long Beach on the map."

That is understandable if only because the ship is so big that Beatrice Lillie once moved to ask, "What time does this place get to England?"

The Queen Mary is 1,019 feet long, 118 feet wide and is held together by 10-million rivets. Launched on Sept. 26, 1934, her 12 decks carried a crew of 1,285 and 2,038 passengers, plus six miles of carpeting, 30,000 sheets and 210,000 towels.

The rudder weighed 140 tons. The four 18-foot propellers that reached 30 knot speeds each weighed 32 tons. After her arrival here shipworkers removed 320 tons of old paint, a weight loss that saw the entire ship ride one inch higher in the waber.

Regularly, the deep-throated tones of the ship's horns blast out over the harbor. The radar scanner still revolves for tourists' benefit. And except for a lack of engine vibration and one sign that says, "City Employees Only," the Queen Mary Hyatt House could be on some eternal voyage to nowhere.

"We're getting there. Our occupancy rate is climbing past 50 per cent now," said Allen Lonstron, local sales director for Hyatt, a corporation that operates 55 hotels in 15 states, 14 countries and one ocean liner.

Regular staterooms cost $22 to $35 (children under 12 free). Suites run from $75 to $210 per night for four bedrooms, two parlors and two maids' quarters. That does not cover meals at the ship's five restaurants, which range from the Sir Winston Churchill (New York Steak Prime Minister, $8.25) to the Observation Lounge (Polish sausage, $1.10).

Much of the hotel's business is tourists and conventions.

Wheels Spun Early

By IAN DARLING
Times Staff

In 1919 Bill Bridgewood's mother started the wheels rolling towards finding a job for her 16-year-old son. She found one, and in the 54 years since, Bridgewood has kept the wheels of others rolling.

Today is the first day of the 71-year-old's retirement from his job as mechanic for the Victoria City Police department—a post he has held since 1931, making him the department's longest serving employee.

Bridgewood started working with cars in 1919 when his mother got him a job as an apprentice mechanic at Jamieson Motors in Victoria. She had gone around town looking for a job for him since he was so young.

Would he have become a mechanic if his mother had not made the suggestion?

"Well, we'll never know," he said with a grin during an interview this week.

Bridgewood first worked with police vehicles when he returned to Victoria from Seattle in 1923, following a four-year apprenticeship with Nash Corporation. The department then had two vehicles—now there are 20.

The department had bought a Nash and took it for repairs to Begg Motor Co., where Bridgewood worked upon his return.

Obviously satisfied with his work, police chief Thomas Heatley went looking for Bridgewood after hearing he had left Begg Motor's.

Bridgewood said he decided to start his own firm because the "depression hit us" and it was the only way to make a "half-way decent living."

Asked if he had any comment to make about the police chiefs he has worked for—Thomas Heatley, John McLellan, John Blackstock, and present Chief John Gregory—he said, "As far as I'm concerned I've had wonderful co-operation."

But he did say there was a time, in the 30s—when the city could not pay its bills to him.

"I used to carry it for two (or) three months at a time."

"Does that ever happen now," the Times asked. "No way," the mechanic replied.

He also said all former bills now, had been paid.

Questioned about recent controversy concerning the safety of police cars, Bridgewood said he had been instructed by the police chiefs to maintain the cars in proper manner.

"I would drive any one of those cars at any time at speeds of whatever may be necessary. I have no complaints," he said.

In the days ahead, Bridgewood—who has been working for the force longer than anyone else at present—said he plans to "sit around for a month or so and kind of think things out."

Bridgewood was born in Burslem, England, and moved with his family to Calgary when he was four.

"Poppa got kind of tired of English ways of doing things," he said.

The family moved from Calgary to Victoria when he was eight.

A keen baseball player in younger days, Bridgewood is interested in oil painting and tinkering around a home workshop.

He is also a member of the Eagles and the Masons, and is a past Eagle provincial president.

Bridgewood, whose son Peter is a constable with the force, will be making at least one trip back to the police station before finally leaving—he'll be dropping in Monday just to introduce new mechanic John Graham to the garage.

Soviets Strike Gas

MOSCOW (Reuter) — Soviet geologists have discovered another large deposit of natural gas in the Southern Karakum Desert in the Soviet central Asian republic of Turkmenia, the news agency Tass reported Thursday. Tass said 130 billion cubic metres of gas were believed to lie beneath the area of the small town of Tahta-Bazar, not far from the Afghan border.

FOOD STORE BOMB THREAT NETS CASH

TORONTO (CP) — David Ferrari, manager of a North York Dominion food store, was warned by a telephone caller Friday that his store would be blown up unless all the money from the cash register was placed behind a fence to the rear of the building.

After Mr. Ferrari put money there, the caller told him where the bomb could be found, and that it could be disarmed by pulling the wires off the battery.

Police said the bomb, which Ferrari had disarmed and thrown in a waste paper basket, had no explosive in it.

The amount of money involved is undetermined.

NO DEATH WORRIES FOR HEART SURVIVOR

TORONTO (CP) The world's longest-surviving male with a heart transplant, Perrin Johnston of Toronto, says he's having a wonderful time living for today and forgetting about yesterday and tomorrow.

"I no longer fear death," the 61-year-old Johnston said in an interview Thursday night after his regular working day. "How can you fear something that has been so real and yet passed you by?"

After six years of constant heart disease, he was dying on Nov. 17, 1968, when he was wheeled into the operating room of St. Michael's Hospital here. Sixty-three minutes later, he came out with a new heart.

Now he is the second-longest survivor of a heart transplant, antedated only by Bette Anick of Milwaukee, Wis., who received her new heart the month before he did. Louis Russell of Richmond, Va., was the longest living recipient until he died Wednesday. He received a new heart in August, 1968.

Johnston, whose wife is a nurse at the hospital where he received the transplant, is a customer service man with an oil company.

"A lot of people probably think I spend all my time sitting around the house," he said. "Don't believe it. I work just like anybody else and eat my lunch at my desk."

A PROVOCATIVE LETTER

One of the more intelligent and challenging letters I have ever received in a lifetime of chess correspondence is the one (quite severely trimmed for reasons of space) below. As I write this, we STILL don't know whether Bobby Fischer will defend his title:

Dear Mr. Koltanowski,

I have only been interested in chess for around two years (I am almost 17 years old), but I have admired your work a great deal during this short amount of time. Your chess column appears in my Sunday newspaper.

My question (or comment) deals with the column you wrote a few weeks back in which you stated: "It is very easy to present a black-and-white case against Fischer. On the other hand, I must confess to an admiration for the man — not only for his imcomparable play but also because, by whatever means, he has focused the world's attention on the greatest and most challenging of games. The World Championship will be devalued if it goes by default to one of the two challengers, and chess will be the loser. All possible effort should be put forward to reach a compromise, difficult though that may seem right now."

While I agree that it would be a sad day in chess history if the championship must be decided by default, I also believe that it is degrading to chess if the powers that be are forced to acquiesce to every ridiculous demand made by one man, even though he is champion. Furthermore, how good a champion is Fischer if he has not played a single tournament game of chess since conquering Spassky and obtaining the crown? Since Fischer seems unlikely to yield from his position of "10 wins the champion only needs 9, the challengers must win by at least 10-8," and since this formula for the championship match is totally unacceptable, we might as well simply . . . be prepared to see the championship return to behind the Iron Curtain once more. I would like to ask . . . why do we really want Fischer to remain on top? He has shown us unparalleled brilliance, but also supreme obstinacy and immaturity . . . He can only help by actually playing the game. I am sure we would all like to see a compromise, but that possibility seems highly unlikely . . .

Very truly yours,
Jerome M. Balsam,
Oceanside, New York.

Condominium Tenants Out

EDMONTON (CP) — An increasing number of Edmonton apartments are being converted to condominiums and tenants are being forced out with inadequate notice, city council was told.

As a result, council approved a recommendation from commissioners that Edmonton ask the provincial government to amend the Landlord and Tenant Act to require landlords to give at least six months' notice when converting apartments or other housing units from rental accommodation to condominiums.

Acid Spill 'No Danger'

FORT NELSON (CP) — Dow Chemicals Ltd. is studying how it can move 4,500 gallons of acid spilled 44 miles south of here Monday and mistakenly neutralized with another acid. Officials say the acids pose no danger to people but must be removed, along with all saturated earth, above the water table because of danger to fish. A nearby culvert runs into the Prophet River, about a mile away.

PADDED BRAS 'NOT ANSWER'

LONDON (Reuter) — More British women are having surgery to enlarge their breasts in hopes of having a better love life, says a report published in a medical newspaper.

Dr. Ivan Felstein, writing in Pulse, says padded bras are not the answer for a young woman "sensitive about her lack of endowment — particularly when a sexual relationship is developing."

Studies in Britain and the United States had shown that most women wanting cosmetic breast operations were in their 30s, and had temporarily experienced fuller breasts after pregnancy.

And what makes them best.

More choice.

We go to more sunny places than any other holidaymaker. We also offer a wide, wide choice of accommodations. Each one is checked out by expert buyers. And what variety! Elegant resort hotels. Smaller, and less go-go hotels. Apartments and villas with a kitchen where you can prepare meals. When you vacation with Canada's Number One Holidaymaker, you suit yourself, your lifestyle, your budget.

Deluxe flight.

On most Sunflight holidays, you fly on private chartered jets. Each of these flights has an open bar. Free. We also serve excellent meals, usually accompanied by wine. Free. And liqueurs. Free.

Tender care.

Sunflight never leaves you to fend for yourself. Friendly, well-informed people greet you at the airport here—and there. They help you get settled, make sure that you (and your baggage) are in the right spot at the right time.

You can say that again!

With Sunflight, you save a lot of money on hotel rates and transportation. You get an excellent choice of places, prices, and hotels. Lots of free goodies. And all the tender-loving care you want. That's what makes Sunflight holidays best buys.

What to do now? See a travel agent.

If you know exactly what you want, a travel agent can book your holiday with just one phone call. Or he can show you more best buys in the fat, fact-packed, full-colour Sunflight catalogue.

PREHISTORIC CUTTLEFISH FIRST FLESH-EATING CREATURE

BERKELEY, CALIF. (UPI) — A prehistoric squid-like cuttlefish that preyed on crabs in the ocean which once covered California and Nevada has been determined to be the earliest flesh-eating creature known, according to a husband-wife scientific team.

The ancient cuttlefish appeared 100 million years earlier than previously believed, an article in the November issue of the journal of Paleontology said.

J. Wyatt Durham of the University of California, Berkeley, and Jean B. Firby of the California Academy of Sciences in San Francisco wrote that teeth fossils were found imbedded in the rock in the White Mountains near Bishop, Calif., 65 miles northwest of Death Valley. The fish itself, they said, measured about four feet in length.

Durham and Firby said the teeth were those of a predator, apparently blunted by a lifetime of attacks on hard-shelled prey.

It is the first evidence, they said, that highly developed predatory creatures existed as early in the evolutionary calendar as 600 million years ago. They had previously been known to exist 500 million years ago.

The two paleontologists said the teeth fossils were found in rock that dated from the early Cambrian age and, at first, their identity was a mystery.

Then they noticed many of the cone-shaped teeth were arranged in elongated bands similar to a radul, the tongue-like structure found in most living molluscs such as snails and mussels. Further studies concluded the teeth were from prehistoric cuttlefish, they said.

Durham and Firby found 40 fossil specimens with the distinctive ¼-inch teeth scattered over a wide range of one-time ocean floor.

Remains of most of the creatures from that period were swept away by currents and other disturbances, they said, but the fossils discovered were of cuttlefish apparently caught in an underwater slide and trapped over the centuries.

Eskimo Sculpture Exhibit Brings Art to the Blind

By AB KENT
Times Staff

When it comes to art there's a small group in Victoria that has quite literally developed a fine feeling for the subject.

They are the blind, for whom a special tactile exhibition of Eskimo art is underway until Wednesday at Canadian National Institute for the Blind through the department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

Many blind viewers of sculpture from north to 60 degrees latitude may not know much about art, but they know what they feel. And the blind, usually eager for new experiences often denied them in the normal course of events, have responded enthusiastically to the showing.

The 26 pieces of bone, ivory and soapstone carving are at the end of a two-year circuit of similar exhibitions in other parts of Canada. They opened here Monday and have been shown daily 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m.

CNIB district administrator Isabel Beveridge said the individual items range from miniature to a 30-pound soapstone carving of a hawk, one of the larger examples of Eskimo artistry.

Textures vary from satin smooth ivory, horn and porous whalebone to the polished masses of grey and blck soapstone for which Pond Inlet and Cape Dorset have become known the world over.

Programs are in English and French, transcribed into Braille, as are the identifying inscriptions at each exhibit.

For the art-lovers among the blind the showing is a gratification; for others it was an introduction to indigenous work if not to thre-dimensional art. One woman exclaimed excitedly it was the first time she had a chance to touch soapstone, about which she had only heard.

Knowing about Eskimo carvings by reputation is one thing — "brailling it" is something else, said Beveridge.

"I've never seen a hawk in flight," she said, explaining she is blind in one eye and has marginal perception in the other. But being able to feel, the massive energy of the carving, the taut line of the neck, the talons, the wings — "to get the pciture of it there, to feel its claws, does a great deal for me."

She confirms the intent of putting the $25,000 exhibit on the road, selected by two blind women.

One purpose was to put the exquisite design of Eskimo carving into the hands of the blind or near-blind. The other "is to acquaint all Canadians with the rich heritage the contemporary Eskimo has inherited from his forebears."

Pacemaker Recharge 'Success'

VANCOUVER (CP) — Mrs. Rachel McFarland, 68, of chilliwack, is believed to be the recipient of the first rechargeable heart pacemaker in Canada.

The operation was performed Nov. 7 by the cardothoracic unit at the Vancouver General Hospital and a news conference was called Friday to announce its success.

Dr. M. H. Shaw said traditional pacemakers—tiny electronic devices needed to regulate patient's hearts—operate by five-nickel-cadmium cells that have to be replaced by surgery every four or five years.

He said attempts to use a rechargeable system have been frustrated in the past by problems of what to do with the oxygen liberated in the sealed cells during the recharging process.

Dr. Shaw said the new device manufactured in California has a "secret absorbent material which soaks up the oxygen." "The process doesn't generate heat and doesn't expand the energy cell," he said.

The rechargeable system is guaranteed to last 10 years and is expected to last much longer. It costs $1,300 a unit and is provided under medicare.

Mrs. McFarland said her pacemaker is recharged once a week through special equipment that plugs into the household circuit.

Aid to Oil Lands Faces Phase-Out

OTTAWA (CP) — Canada will gradually phase out direct capital assistance totalling more than $84 million to Algeria, Nigeria and Indonesia, Paul Gerin-Lajoie president of the Canadian International Development Agency CIDA said Friday.

Gerin-Lajoie told the Commons miscellaneous estimates committee that new revenues from oil production are gradually improving standards of living in these countries, and there is less need for Canadian financial aid.

Only hours later, Government House Leader Mitchell Sharp said that CIDA would continue $84 million in aid programs to the three countries.

Sharp told the Commons there were "certain programs under way that were very useful in the development of these countries."

He said the countries are still underdeveloped despite their recently-discovered oil resources.

Gerin-Lajoie had indicated to the Commons committee that Canada wanted to make a deal with rich Arab oil producers to provide aid to underdeveloped countries.

Under the proposal, outlined by Gerin-Lajoie, the newly affluent oil-producing countries would provide financial aid while Canada would provide technical assistance to underdeveloped nations.

Gerin-Lajoie refused to elaborate on the scheme, saying the proposed aid plans were still in the development stage.

He said he would visit three Middle East members of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries in December to urge their support for the scheme.

While Gerin-Lajoie and Sharp discussed Canadian aid in conflicting terms in Ottawa, Finance Minister John Turner, in Washington, said there are indications of progress in international efforts to co-ordinate programs to assist countries hard hit by soaring oil prices.

Turner was meeting, in his capacity as head of the Interim Committee of the International Monetary Fund, with U.S. Treasury Secretary William Simon.

Fair Beefs At False Food Ad

TORONTO (CP) — The Royal Agricultural Winter Fair has complained to the federal consumer and corporate affairs department saying that "royal beef" advertised by Loblaw Groceterias Co. Ltd. is not the beef shown at the fair and sold to supermarket chains.

The headlines across the top of the Loblaw ad read: "Loblaw's royal beef bonanza! Take advantage of the best values in Canada Grade A Beef."

The use of the one word royal was too much, said fair president Trumbull Warren.

In its Globe and Mail ad, the fair says beef advertised in the Star and termed "royal beef" is not to be construed as beef which was shown and purchased at the fair.

"The major purchase of the grand champion steer, the Queen's Guineas steer, the grand champion dressed carcass and several hundred show beef steers at the 1974 "Royal" was made by Dominion Stores Ltd.," the ad read.

"We're terribly, terribly hurt by this sort of thing," Warren said. "There's going to be a hell of a fuss."

He said Dominion and Steinberg's bought the top three prize steers and other prize steers for $8.75 a pound.

Albert Hargreaves, a Loblaw executive, said he was not authorized to speak for the company and other Loblaws officials were not available for comment.

Food Chains Freeze Prices

NEW YORK (AP) — Two of the largest supermarket chains in the United States announced plans Friday for temporary price freezes affecting about 10 per cent of products they sell, while other retailers said there are better ways to save consumers money.

The price-freeze announcements came from A and P (the Great Atlantic and Pacific Tea Co. Inc.) and the Kroger Co. Spokesmen for Safeway, the third of the big-three chains in terms of sales, were not available for comment.

An A and P spokesman in New York said the chain will freeze prices on about 1,000 private-label brand items, including bread, cheese, coffee, tuna, pasta products, canned fruits and vegetables and frozen foods until at least Jan. 1.

In addition, starting Monday, the store will institute an "Early Warning System" at stores across the country, posting a weekly list of increases on all items seven days before the prices are changed.

James Herring, president of the Kroger Co., which has outlets in 20 states, said in Cincinnati, Ohio, that his store's freeze will extend for two months, starting Dec. 1 and will cover 1,100 brand-name and private-label items, including spaghetti, cereals, vegetables, snacks and paper and household goods.

Under questioning, Herring said Kroger did not intend "to play a game with the consumers" and said the store will not raise prices of other items to make up for losses incurred because of the freeze.

The average supermarket carries anywhere from 8,000 to 10,000 different products. Industry profits currently are averaging about 56 cents for every $1 of sales, compared to just under half a cent on $1 of sales last year.

A spokesman for the Super-Market Institute, a trade association based in Chicago, said freezes are possible, particularly on private-label brands, because the stores "usually have made commitments and purchases well in advance."

But some other retailers were dubious about the freeze and warning ideas.

One industry source, who declined to be identified, said there were anywhere from 800 to 1,000 price changes a week and doubted that A and P will be able to keep up with the fluctuations.

A spokesman for Pathmark Supermarkets, an East Coast chain, said his company had tried and abandoned the freeze idea.

"It is an effective thing only when consumers have a lot of discretionary income and can afford to stockpile," he said, noting that budgets currently are too tight to allow purchases of large amounts.

He said that instead of an calls "value planners," an Pathmark puts out what it "Early Warning System," nouncing items on sale in future weeks and urging consumers to wait to purchase these products.

Weddings

Sneddon — Jepson

Mr. and Mrs. A. G. Jepson are pleased to announce the marriage of their only daughter Marian Louise, to Mr. Alexander Johnston (Sandy) Sneddon, son of Mr. and Mrs. David Sneddon. The ceremony took place on September 21, 1974, in James Bay United Church, Rev. R. H. Dobson officiating. A dinner and dance reception followed at the Victoria Edelweiss Club. The happy couple are now residing at 308—910 St. Andrew St., New Westminster.

Fyfe — Walker

Reverend Hugh M. Hunter officiated at a double-ring ceremony in First United Church on Friday, October 11th, at 7 p.m. when Jean Elizabeth, younger daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Wm. E. Walker, exchanged wedding vows with Stewart Darwin Fyfe, youngest son of Mr. and Mrs. E. H. Fyfe.

The bride entered the church with her father and was given in marriage by both parents. Her lovely floor-length gown, designed and made by herself, was of white chiffon with lace bodice, ruffle-edged skirt and sweeping train. She wore a chapel length veil edged in lace. Her bouquet was of Talisman roses, stephanotis and baby's breath. The Maid of Honor, Miss Susan Walker, sister of the bride, and bridesmaids Miss Linda Rhodes and Miss Gloria Parry, wore identical floral polyester gowns in autumn shades and carried bouquets of yellow chrysanthemums. Mr. Sigmund Aasebo attended as best man and Messrs. Ken and John Fyfe, brothers of the groom, were ushers. Soloist during the signing of the Register was Katherine Birch.

At the reception held at the Uplands Golf Club, Mr. Roy Okell proposed the toast to the bride. Mr. Thos McKechie, uncle of the bride, acted as Master of Ceremonies. Following a honeymoon in San Diego, the young couple are now residing in Victoria.

Cushing — Alleyne

Mr. and Mrs. James Alleyne, 497 Thetis Crescent, Victoria, are pleased to announce the marriage of their eldest daughter Pamela Elaine, to Mr. Michael Edgar Cushing, elder son of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph E. Cushing, Victoria, B.C.

The wedding took place Friday, November 29, 1974 at 6 p.m. in St. Peter's Church, Padre Oakes officiating. Miss Belinda Alleyne was maid of honour, and Mr. Darrell Ward was best man.

8 CARDS OF THANKS

We would like to take this opportunity of thanking all of our relatives, the pallbearers and our many friends for their love, help and devotion shown towards us in the recent passing of our dear mother, Mrs. Mary J. D. Daniels. Also many thanks to Drs. Carlow, Winsby, Garnett Balmer, and Finlayson, and the staff at the Victoria General Hospital. To Pastor Paul Hawkes and the soloist Mr. Melvyn Chesworth, we are very grateful to them for their spiritual help. Words fail us as we think of our deep gratitude to the members of the Saanich Police Ambulance Service for the prompt way in which they helped us in our times of crisis and emergencies over the past few years. — Mrs. J. Lefries, and Mr. and Mrs. C. Daniels.

9 IN MEMORIAM

THEY SHALL GROW NOT OLD, AS WE WHO ARE LEFT GROW OLD, AGE SHALL NOT WEARY THEM, NOR THE YEARS CONDEMN. AT THE GOING DOWN OF THE SUN, AND IN THE MORNING, WE WILL REMEMBER THEM.

UPLANDS

This architecturally designed home is situated on a beautiful, secluded, park-like lot of over half an acre, bordering on Uplands Park. The house is of true Post and Beam construction of 2100 sq. ft. all on one floor with radiant oil hot water heating.

There are four bedrooms and two full vanity bathrooms. The large kitchen with the spacious, delightful family room off, is a gem of meticulous design which the mother of a family, or a gourmet cook, would truly appreciate. In fact the whole house is designed for easy yet gracious living with storage and "built-ins" galore.

A large floor-ceiling raised fireplace, graces the living room and a "wall" of thick plate glass sliding doors open onto the serene back patio.

There are so many "thoughtful" things in this house—you must see it!

It is very realistically priced at $92,000. M.L.S. For appointment to view please call:

VOS MAN OF LA MANCHA ACHIEVES THE IMPOSSIBLE

By AUDREY JOHNSON
Times Staff

To one of this city's longest sustained institutions, the Victoria Operatic Society, must go the distinction of having produced the best theatre on the McPherson Playhouse stage this season.

Man of La Mancha, allowing for show style preferences, may stand in fact as the best VOS show within memory.

It premiered Friday before a large, enthusiastic audience and will remain at the McPherson until Dec. 7.

Director Allan Purdy, music director Tudor Jones, choreographer June Elsdon, and the whole company have achieved what most people familiar with La Mancha probably thought at least next to impossible.

Set in the deep dungeon of a Spanish prison, the story is concerned with poet-actor Miguel De Cervantes and his creation before a kangaroo edurt, of the persons of Don Quixote and Sancho Panza and their adventures.

It shifts back and forth between reality and fantasy, moving in circular patterns that are well defined by the director and smoothly linked.

The towering, shadow-haunted set with its ominous appearing-disappearing staircase, interesting levels, murky reaches and imaginative lighting has powerful magic for mood-setting.

Within this Purdy has used his people well to create form and movement. The rhythm, pace and generally the tempo, are exceptionally good. There are brawling climaxes and pin-dropping scenes that hold the audience in thrall.

Colin Skinner presents a splendidly convincing Quixote — fanatical, gentle, comical, moving. Skinner is more actor than singer but manages the famous songs, Dulcinea, The Impossible Dream and Golden Helmet reasonably well because of the intense feeling he brings to them.

It is difficult to imagine a better Aldonza (Dulcinea) than Janie Woods-Morris. Different maybe, but not better. She is entirely believable as the bedraggled venomous harlot as well as in the phases of her transition. And her voice, when it is required to be so, is quite lovely.

Quixote's servant, Sancho, is carved by James Leard into a kind of Shakespearean clown — comical, affecting, earthy and devoted. It is a distinct portrait, clearly and warmly projected.

Bill Broadhead, Eric Roberts, Peter Chipman, Richard Litt, Jane Ratcliffe in support roles, and John Britt and Rick Simmonds as a pair of whimsical horses are among the plus factors.

Of major importance is the presence of a great orchestra — in the wings, not the pit — which, under Jones' Baton, is always in perfect balance and sounds as if it had been playing the show for a year instead of a few days.

An outstanding feature of the orchestra is the superb guitar which gives character and flavor to the woodwinds-bass-percussion and brass ensemble. Carol Whitney is the guitarist.

This production is also remarkable for the fine quality and manipulation of its sound installation.

Altogether a show to remember and to applaud — as the first night audience did — loud and long.

Small But Vital Tasks Will Aid Cabbage Group

GARDENING
jack beastall

There are a few small but important jobs on the home gardener's schedule for early December, and one concerns the winter brassicas.

For newcomers to gardening, brassica is the generic name of the Coles and Mustards, and is used by gardeners as a collective name for all the cabbage group.

Brassica caulorapa is the Kohl-rabi, B. chinensis covers the Chinese cabbages, and B napobrassica is our Rutabaga or Laurentian Turnip. Brassica rapa is the summer or white turnip, and B. fimbriata we call Kales.

Brassica oleracea contains many varieties of greens grown in the home garden. The Tree Kales or Cow Cabbage are variety acephala (no head); var. botrytis has the whitish heads of thickened flower clusters we call Cauliflower, also the white Broccoli; var. capitata grows with one dense head of consolidated leaves, the Head Cabbage; var. gemmifera has small compact heads in the axil of the leaves, the Brussels Sprouts; var. italica has thickened flowr clusters not condensed into a solid head, the Sprouting or Branching Broccoli.

The plants now in the garden are varieties of oleracea, including Savoy cabbage, Kale, Brussels sprouts, the so-called perennial Broccoli, and the spring cabbage "Flower-of-Spring". One thing these have in common is the need for tight soil around their roots. This also applies to Wallflowers (Cheiranthus) and Stocks (Mathiola), both close relatives in the large plant family of Crucifers.

In the relatively dry soil of later summer and early fall these plants made good growth, but as the moisture from each rainy period penetrates more deeply, the soil around the roots becomes increasingly loose.

Coupled with the normal November winds which often reach gale force, the plants are rocked sufficiently to pull the roots from intimate contact with the soil. When this happens cabbage fail to make tight heads, Brussels sprouts become balls of loose leaves, Broccoli tends to rush into flower instead of producing large bud clusters, and Wallflowers and Stocks fail to produce a good showing of flowers.

Our job now is to prevent this loosening of the roots either by tamping the soil around each plant, or by tying each plant to a stake firmly driven into the soil beyond the root area. To damage the roots with a stake would be as diastrous as letting the plants rock in a wind.

For tamping or treading it may be necessary to apply a two-inch deep layer of dry compost over the surface soil, especially if clay predominates. It is also wise to make this layer a little deeper against the main stem and compact it well to give added support.

In garlens exposed to severe winds, staking is the answer. This is the method commonly used in south-west England and northern France where farm fields on the cliffs are open to the Atlantic gales that sweep the English Channel.

These stakes are always driven at an angle so as to clear the root area and lean towards the plants, and leaning stake being less susceptible to wind and providing better support.

Stocks and Wallflowers are not so easy to stake. Dry compost and tamping or treading the soil works well providing it is repeated as necessary through the windy periods of late fall, winter, and early spring.

Many gardeners are concerned because developing Brussels sprouts are not tight as they should be. Aside from the soil being too loose around the roots, soft buttons, as the sprouts are called, can result from too much fertilizer which promotes rapid and soft growth.

The other Brassicas needing a soil slightly enriched with fertilizer are the cauliflower and white headed broccoli, and to a lesser degree the sprouting broccoli.

Many gardens for the first time will have plantings of vegetables to be used over late fall and early winter. To realize the full value of these fresh vegetables they must be easily accessible.

No cook can be expected to wade through a foot of mud to reach a few leeks, parsnips, or a cabbage. Rain overhead and mud underfoot would cause any cook to settle for supermarket imports.

However, a few solid planks, or even pieces of shiplap, laid along the vegetable rows will provide a safe and clean footing and be an inducement to brave the weather for the pleasure of truly garden-fresh flavors. This is a problem to solve this weekend.

When weather prevents working outdoors, a little time spent on checking vegetables, tubers, and corms in storage may prove exceptionally profitable.

Storage diseases and rots develop rapidly when crops have not properly matured, and when storage temperatures or humidity vary greatly from crop requirements. The speed with which these diseases and rots spread is truly amazing.

White it is desirable that all storage crops be checked every two to three weeks, a more thorough inspection is required in early December, around New Year, and again at the beginning of February.

It really surprises me the number of gardeners who spend time and energy for six months to produce good food crops, then put them into storage and forget them. Outdoor gardening may now be limited in extent and the gardener's time taken with other occupations, but the living and breathing entities in storage still require regular attention.

Fruits should be carefully inspected, removing any which show soft spots or moulds, and the area of shelf or box touched by them thoroughly cleaned to remove all spores. Spreading the balance for better air circulation may be necessary.

Squash and marrows in too low a temperature or in too high humidity will sweat and develop moulds. Damaged potatoes will also mould and quickly affect adjacent tubers.

Dahlia tubers, Begonia tubers, gladiolus corms and chrysanthemum roots in storage should all be checked before the first cold spell arrives to make sure temperature and moisture conditions are satisfactory.

Temporary warmth conservers, such as sacking, old mats or crib mattresses, will soon be needed for the cold-frames, as well as sheets of three-ply or lengths of shiplap to cover these materials during periods of snow. Having these in readiness can mean the difference between saving and losing the plants within the frames.

If you have neighbors or friends who say "gardening is finished for this year" they may have time to come and help you with some of these jobs.

Project To Seek Prawn Grounds

B.C.'s prawn fisheries have received a shot in the arm from Ottawa and the provincial government.

Recreation and Conservation Minister Jack Radford said his department has entered a cost-sharing project with the federal fisheries and marine service to locate new prawn fishing grounds in coastal waters.

A $30,000 contract has been signed between the two government agencies and Henry Delisle of Campbell River for the charter of his fishing vessel the Cape Rouge II.

Delisle will conduct exploratory prawn fishing under the direction of scientists.

Research scientist Terry H. Butler from the Pacific Biological Station at Nanaimo, who is in charge of the program, said the vessel will explore prawn fishing areas in the central and northern waters of B.C.

"We will have a good idea of the potential for commercial prawn harvesting in these areas when the project is completed," he said.

He said it should take about two months to complete the survey.

Prawn fishing at present is a minor industry, he said.

Work for Week

Tree leaves have fallen in quantities during the past week. Gathering them into heaps and then putting either into compost alternately with other garden refuse or into a separate bin will take a few hours this weekend. Remember every leaf makes a speck of soil for your plants. Don't waste any, either by burning or to paid collectors.

Some gardens are only now showing withered chrysanthemusm, faded geraniums and browned African marigolds. Cut down the flower stems of chrysanthemums to about four inches, being sure each plant has been tagged with correct name or at least the color. If you have coldframe, lift the roots for wintering under cover to protect from excessive wet and hard frost. Otherwise take chance in open garden.

If no suitable storage for geraniums for winter, pull up by the roots the same as the African marigolds, and discard to compost heap. Chop the stems into smaller pieces to rot more quickly.

Firm all members of cabbage family, including perennial broccoli, kale and sprouts, to be sure the roots are not loosened by wind.

Dig one root of Jerusalem artichokes to check crop.

An adventure with the well-known Victoria naturalist, woodsman and guide, Freeman "The Skipper" King, this little book is a selection of his intimate stories of the living things around us.

The 72-page, soft-bound, limited edition is an introduction and an invitation to the exciting outdoors from a man who knows so much of nature's mysteries.

Artist and photographer have caught the writer's mood and make Mr. King's book a notable local production.

French Discovery Cancer Weapon?

WASHINGTON (CP) — A team of French scientists has identified a substance that they believe prevents the body's natural defense system from attacking cancerous tumors the way it attacks other foreign objects.

This substance, the scientists said in the current issue of the Proceedings of the National Academy of Sciences, may be the same as one that keeps the mother's immune defense system from rejecting an unborn fetus as a foreign object.

If further research proves the finding and turns up a way to block the action of the substance, doctors will have a powerful new tool to fight cancer and a new method of birth control. It could also be used to prevent the rejection of transplanted organs, such as hearts and kidneys.

The work is still preliminary, however. The scientists at the Pasteur Institute in Paris, including Nobel laureate Francois Jacob, are still studying the substance in cancer cells from mice.

Nevertheless, other immunologists hailed the research as a very important piece of work.

"In order to manipulate the immune response," said Dr. Fritz Bach of the University of Wisconsin, "we need to understand at a cellular level what is going on."

He said the French team appears to be the first to have isolated the substance from tumors that prevents an immune reaction.

Dr. Robert Good, an immunologist and president of Memorial-Slogan Kettering Cancer Research Institute in New York, called the question of how both cancerous tumors and the unborn fetus receive protection from the body's defense system "one of the major unresolved problems of medical science."

Other foreign objects, ranging from disease-causing viruses on up to transplanted organs, trigger an immediate immune response.

The French scientists found that cancer in mice did not stop the immune system from fighting an invasion by a bacterial microorganism.

The inability of mices' defenses to attack the cancer, therefore, was due to something happening around the cancer cells, rather than to a total breakdown of the immune system, the French scientists said.

Indeed, they found that the cancer cells were able to resist the key part of the defense system: an increased buildup of the white blood cells.

In laboratory dishes, the researchers found that the macrophages that usually envelop foreign objects stayed away from the cancer cells.

Moreover, despite the increased immune response, the scientists failed to find any signs of inflammation. This familiar reaction, which normally accompanies the body's attemptes to ward off foreign objects with its immune defenses, shows up as the fever that accompanies illness or the redness around a sore.

Other tests showed that the malignant cells release a substance that stops this inflammatory response, the scientists reported. The absence of inflammatory reactions in tumor tissues is indeed remarkable," the French scientists said.

"Since most tumor cells are able to destroy and invade adjacent tissues, one would expect the continuous release of necrotic (dead) cell debris to result in strong inflammation."

Cells from the trophoblast the major component of the placenta which surrounds an unborn child in the mother's womb — also fail to trigger an immune response or any inflammation. The French scientists found that they, along with the cancer cells, stopped macrophages from developing them the way other foreign objects would be enveloped.

"The absence of such a reaction both in placenta and tumor is so strikingly similar that it points to a common mechanism," the scientists reported.

The next step would be finding out if trophoblast cells give off the same substance as the tumor cells to protect against the immune reaction. But the scientists said they had not been able to get enough trophoblast cells to do so.

At present, doctors are trying to trigger a greater immune reponse to fight cancer.

A means to counteract the anti-rejection factor of an unborn child could be used for birth control; if a woman got pregnant, the fetus would be automatically rejected.

Besides Jacob, who won the Nobel Prize for medicine in 1965, the other scientists are Robert M. Fauve, Brigitte Hecin, Hedwig Jacob and Jean A. Gaillard.

'ERE 'ERE, what's all this about then? George, the Harlequin Great Dane pup belonging to Victoria Ald. Mike Young, is accustomed to such curious reactions when he takes his owner for a morning constitutional down Rockland. But there's no real mystery in that weird-looking antenna of his. To make sure his docked ears stand up properly until the cartilage secures, they have to be bound up for a few days at a time. George, four and a half months old and a boisterous 70 pounds, tries to shake off the supports but is getting used to them, according to his owner.

Escapes Prompt Sheriff Review

The B.C. Sheriff service will undergo a total re-examination as a result of incidents in Nanaimo and Vancouver Thursday and Friday which ended in three deputy sheriffs being stabbed and beaten by their prisoner escorts.

Geoffrey Mortimer, head of the service, told the Times he will begin Monday to meet with deputy sheriffs in Vancouver and elsewhere "to listen to what they have to say."

The sheriffs are upset over a lack of protection in defending themselves while escorting prisoners.

However, Mortimer said he did not feel arming the sheriffs with guns was the answer.

Commenting in the stabbing of two sheriffs in Nanaimo Thursday by three prisoners he said if the guards had been armed "I think one of them would be dead today."

He also felt the prisoners in Vancouver would not have been able to make their desperate escape bid Friday if an armed police officer had not been there. The prisoners attacked the officer in an elevator, slashed his throat with a razor and wrestled his revolver from his holster. A deputy sheriff accompanying them received cuts to his hand in the scuffle but was otherwise unharmed.

Deputy attorney-general David Vickers has ordered a thorough reveiw of events surrounding the two attacks which he described as "vicious and unprovoked."

"We shouldn't jump to any conclusions about arming the sheriffs," Mortimer said. "We have to examine all areas especially our procedures searching prisoners, the security measures we are taking, and the restraining devices we are using."

He found it difficult to understand how prisoners were able to secret weapons on them and said, "we are going to have to spend more time and care searching the people we escort."

He noted since the sheriffs began taking over court security and escort duties in September "everything had gone so well."

"We have escorted on the average 1,000 prisoners a month without problem.

"But perhaps we have been too anxious to help police and have rushed in to take over some escorts we shouldn't have."

He said training of sheriffs will have to be stepped up to stress the need for caution in handling prisoners, particularly those convicted of violent crimes.

Mortimer said some thought would be given also to using different kinds of restraining devices such as belly chains which link handcuffs to a chain worn like a belt around the waist. The device is in use in some parts of the U.S.

Times News Services

LONDON Detectives raided north London homes today and arrested 10 suspected bombers in a crackdown on the newly outlawed Irish Republican Army. In Northern Ireland bombs exploded in two taverns injuring more than 60 persons Friday night.

The arrests were the first made under Britain's new anti-terrorist law which went into effect at midnight and gave police special search and seizure powers.

Police said the suspects were picked up for questioning in connection with bomb blasts in Guildford and Woolwich pubs that killed seven Britons and wounded 86 others in October and early November.

A police spokesman said Scotland Yard has asked the home office for permission to arrest and deport several known IRA activists under the new law.

Within hours after parliament approved legislation Friday banning the IRA and granting extra powers for use against it, Scotland Yard distributed a list of "more than 20" suspects they want to question and possibly order out of the country.

Police renewed their warning against a possible new blitz of IRA reprisal bombings and told people to avoid sites of explosions in case booby-traps had been laid.

At midnight special security units—most of their members in plain clothes—took over passenger surveillence at airports and seaports, taking special care with travelers coming from and leaving for the Irish republic.

Under the new laws, police and immigration officials have the power to request persons arriving from the Irish republic for proof of their identity and the reason for their journey, and to detain suspects on the spot or turn them back.

Extra electronic equipment was installed at the immigration section of London airport and authorities spent Friday studying procedures there so as to better spot IRA suspects.

But despite the flurry of police activity after Parliament outlawed the IRA Friday, Scotland Yard spokesmen said it may still be weeks before the anti-IRA drive can get into full swing in England and Wales.

Police officials warned that caution will have to be taken not to harass or antagonize the more than one million Irish residents in England and Wales.

Central Bank Moves To Boost Economy

OTTAWA (CP) — Federal monetary authorities moved cautiously Friday to stimulate the economy but warned again that they are not relaxing efforts to contain inflation.

The Bank of Canada eased lending restrictions but Gerald Boney, the bank's governor, said they will tkae action to substantially offset the change.

The bank announcement was to reduce to seven per cent from eight the amount of secondary reserves which chartered banks must keep to back up deposits. Primary reserves are cash and secondary reserves are short-term loans, most of which can be converted to cash within 90 days. Current cash reserve requirements are between 5¾ and six per cent.

The bank official said that a lowering of the secondary reserve ratio would 'allow about $550 million of the reserves which the banks now hold . . . to become available as some of their investment money."

He emphasized, however, this would not necessarily result in larger amounts of loan money becoming available since the banks can choose to invest it where they want.

The statement from the central bank said a major factor in the decision was the success of the recent Canada savings bond campaign. The government had net sales of slightly more than $4 billion, a record sales total.

Although reduction in secondary reserve requirements would free about $500 million for chartered banks to make long-term loans. Bouey said, the central bank will use its extra cash to pay off government securities, thus taking money out of the banking system and in large part offsetting the easier loan policy.

Bouey said the central bank's main concern is to not provoke higher inflation by putting too much money into circulation.

Ex-Justice Chosen

DUBLIN (AP) — Cearbhall O'Dalaigh, former Irish chief justice, was nominated unopposed Friday night to succeed the late Erskine Childers as president of the Irish Republic. O'Dalaigh, 63, will be the republic's fifth president. Childers died two weeks ago.

Truce Duties Extended

Times News Services

UNITED NATIONS — The Security Council unanimously gave a six-month extension to the Golan Heights truce force Friday night, but heard a warning from Secretary General Kurt Waldheim that if the reprieve is not used for progress toward a peace settlement, "the dangers of a new military confrontation will steadily increase."

The 1,224-man force that has separated the Israeli and Syrian armies since the disengagement agreement in May was authorized to continue through next May 31. China and Iraq, as usual, did not participate in the 13 to 0 vote.

Meanwhile in the Middle East, Israeli planes today raided the Lebanese border village of Kafra and other targets inland from the coastal city of Tyre, sources in the area said.

By LINDA HUGHES
Times Staff

HONG KONG — Premier Dave Barrett bid farewell to his hosts Friday and made a quiet, undramatic exit from China across an old railway bridge that links the Communist nation with Hong Kong.

The good-bye at Canton railway station marked the end of 11 hard days of work for the delegation's six Chinese interpretors but the young hosts seemed genuinely sorry to say farewell to the expansive socialist premier and his unconventional troupe of companions.

At the end, and throughout the trip, Barrett was his humble best, speaking a great deal about friendship and the warmth and kindness of the Chinese people.

He seldom engaged in political debate with his hosts, never criticizied what he saw and rarely made comparisons with Canada. He played the role of enthusiaistic observer and seemed to go over well with the Chinese.

Always the joker, his backslapping, jovial manner sometimes met with stony silence but more often pleased his hosts who were eager to talk friendship and goodwill and to avoid delicate political discussions.

His enthusiastic mood set the tone for the whole delegation and any cynics in the group tended to keep their thoughts to themselves or save them for quiet comment later.

Barrett pulled many of his old electioneering tricks, rolling up his sleeves and trying to pitch in with the workers and performing his "kitchen trip" everywhere the delegation ate. The Chinese cooks were always bewildered but pleased at the attention they received from their effusive guest who would sneak into the kitchen, shake their hands, tell them he once worked in a kitchen and assured them that cooks are the unsung heroes of the world.

Despite his light-hearted approach, however, Barrett made a visible effort to be diplomatic at all times and avoid the faux pas so many people expected of him.

But the premier was only one among a strange mixture of 14 people brought together to form the B.C. delegation.

The majority of the group were socialists—Barrett, Health Minister Dennis Cocke, Attorney-General Alex Macdonald, Barrett's assistant Harvey Beech and Vancouver-Centre NDP MLA Emery Barnes.

But two staunch free enterprisers — Vancouver businessman Quan Wong and MacMillan Bloedel president Denis Timmis—balanced off the group along with a working man's representative, In-

Charlottes Have Oil, Firm Claims

PRINCE RUPERT (CP) The News says Skaist Mining Ltd., a small Vancouver-based firm, claims to have discovered a substantial amount of shale oil on the Queen Charlotte Islands.

The News quotes Roy Carlson, spokesman for Skaist, as saying the deposits could contain as much as five to 10 billion barrels of oil. The company owns more than 207 claims covering some 10,000 acres on Graham Island, northernmost of the Queen Charlotte chain.

Carlson said six months of testing and drilling are planned to determine the size of the deposit.

The company has entered preliminary negotiations with the Haida Indian Band at Masset, reportedly offering the Haidas five per cent of net profits and a directorship of the firm in return for environmental advice, the News says.

The Vancouver Stock Exchange reported Friday that 481,500 shares of Skaist were traded this week, making it one of the most active mining stocks. It closed at 28 cents after ranging as high as 30 cents and as low as 17 cents, up six cents from last week's close.

Discipline Dispute Shuts Teens' Home

By LIZ HUGHES

A strict and structured group home for teenagers in Victoria West closes today after only nine months of operation, its financing cut off by the provincial department of human resources.

The reason for the cutoff is a controversial issue which has lately been raising eyebrows and ire in the fields of education, child psychology and human rights.

The issue is discipline when to use it, how much to use it or whether to use it at all.

The group home in Vic West, housed in a stately but aging wooden home at 943 Fullerton, was a bastion of discipline.

The home's supervisor, Mark Langley, a quiet young man with a degree in psychology and four years' experience in the child care field, says the home operates on equal measures of love, teaching and discipline.

But the discipline has become a bitter pill for the department of human resources and others in the child care field.

One incident especially, during which workers in the home tied up and sat on a 6-year-old boy who was throwing a tantrum, caused tremors in the department and probably contributed to the financial cutoff.

In a written report on the incident, Langley describes the boy as "epileptic, having behavioral and learning problems since kindergarten."

He had proved unmanageable both in his own home and in a foster home, Langley says.

"When one of the workers the group home first said "no" to something the boy wanted to do "he got quite wild-eyed and threatening," the report says.

The worker did not back down from his stand, and the boy continued with his tantrum which included "threatening staff with a skate and a knife, spitting, banging walls, crying, wailing, throwing various articles, running out on the roof and shouting obscenities."

"For everyone's protection . . . we laid him on the bed and sat on him. He continued to bang around so we warned him that we would tie him up if he continued. He laughed at us and continued. We tied him up," the report says.

After about 10 minutes, the boy's struggling stopped, and the workers untied him.

About a week after the first incident, the situation was repeated and again the workers held him down. "He did not settle so we went to get the rope. He saw the rope and settled down."

Langley says the next time the boy's plans were thwarted, the workers talked to him for five hours, with no physical restraints.

Eventually the boy came to a point where if he was told he could not do something he would sulk, but the tantrums had disappeared.

CALGARY (CP) — Militants occupying the Indian affairs department offices here agreed late Friday night to accept an offer from Indian Affairs Minister Judd Buchanan to discuss their grievances and end their sit-in.

Tank Blast Kills 2

BEAUMONT, Tex. (UPI) — An overheated chemical tank at a synthetic rubber plant caught fire and exploded five times in one hour Friday night killing two persons and injuring 10 others. The blasts destroyed half of the huge $5 million Goodyear Co. plant and damaged homes six miles away.

Japanese Briefed

TOKYO (UPI) — U.S. Secretary of State Henry Kissinger briefed Japanese leaders today on his talks with Chinese diplomats and President Ford's planned trip to Peking next year, and then flew home to Washington.

Train-Car Collision Kills Three

CHILLIWACK (CP)—Three people died about five miles east of here today when two cars collided with a Canadian National Railways coal train.

Carolus Gouwenberg, 18, and his sister Janet Maria, 20, of Agassiz, and Robert Gerber, 23, of Kelowna, were killed.

A police spokesman said the cars struck the 46th car of the 88-car train derailing 11 coal cars.

A CN spokesman said the main line would be closed until midnight.

Odd Tree Brought Fame To 'Backwoods Baronet'

By DENNIS

Fifty years ago Eric Anstruther, a young Scottish surveyor, was strolling along a river bank in the Queen Charlotte Islands when he discovered a golden tree, a lone beacon in a forest of green conifers. Since then both man and tree have achieved some measure of frame.

The golden Sitka spruce of Juskatla has emerged as a scientific enigma, puzzled over by botanists and foresters, while Anstruther went on to inherit two baronetcies and a large Scottish estate on the brink of financial disaster. He became Sir Windham Eric Francis Carmichael-Anstruther, Baronet of Nova Scotia, Baronet of Great Britain and Hereditary Grand Carver to the Royal Household in Scotland.

Many scientists maintain that the golden spruce he found is without parallel, a genetic accident that may never be repeated by nature and that has yet to be duplicated by man under experimental conditions. It is now 161 feet tall and bathed in the same golden sheen which enthralled the young surveyor in 1924.

Botannical Puzzle

Unique in the sea of giant green trees which carpet Graham island, largest of the 150 islands which form the sparsely populated Queen Charlotte group 60 miles off the north coast of British Columbia, the golden spruce remains a botanical puzzle.

Anstruther spotted the tree on the west bank of the Yakoun River near what is now MacMillan Bloedel's Juskatla logging camp. The man who became affectionately known as the "Backwoods Baronet" following his nine years in Canada recalls he was "dumbstruck by the slight of the golden wonder tree."

No less intriguing is Sir Windham himself, now the 74-year-old Laird of Carmichael, a 4,000-acre estate in the Scottish lowlands, 40 miles southwest of Edinburgh. The bearded laird presides over his domain from an 18th century farmhouse. His ancestral now a crumbled ruin which was abandoned after the Second World War.

An explorer and surveyor by profession, his inheritance came as a complete surprise in 1928 on the death of his distant cousin Frederick. The telegram informing Ric Anstruther of his new status was poked through the flap of a weatherbeaten tent at Menzies Bay on Vancouver Island where he was roughing it as a member of a timber surveying team.

"I was only a distant cousin of the previous laird and never expected to inherit," Sir Windham recalled in an interview.

32 Years Away

"It was three months before I went to Scotland. I liked the life so much during my years in Canada that I was only going to stay six months in Scotland, then return." But it was to be 32 years before Sir Windham again set foot in Canada.

Several other spruce trees have been discovered in the Queen Charlottes since Sir Windham's find evidencing similar but less spectacular golden traits. However, not a single golden specimen has been found to date in the huge spruce stands on the B.C. mainland.

Grant Ainscough, MacMillan Bloedel's chief forester, says the tree at Juskatla may be a genetic freak that is unable to fix chlorophyll. We suspect that it can manufacture chlorophyll like any other tree but that it breaks down in sunlight to give the golden color."

No one has a theory as to why this phenomenon is peculiar to the Queen Charlottes, although there is a great deal of spruce in the islands that has evolved in isolation from mainland stands, increasing the odds of a genetic accident through inbred pollination.

Botanists and foresters have been testing the golden spruce and attempting to grow other large specimens from cuttings and graftings for more than 40 years, with little success to date.

A decade ago, 20 cuttings were brought down from the Charlottes and planted at MacMillan Bloedel's Nanaimo arboretum on Vancouver Island. At last count only three survived, despite meticulous care and attention. The three survivors have retained their golden tones but refuse to grow at the same rate as their green brothers. Nature appears reluctant to duplicate a rare, beautiful mistake.

MacMillan Bloedel plans to preserve the Juskatla golden spruce for as long as it lives. Pending approval from the provincial forest service, the company will establish a 12-acre reserve surrounding the tree.

Visitors will have access to the tree from a trail that leads to the opposite bank of the Yakoun River from the Juskatla-Port Clements road.

Dr. Oscar Sziklai of the University of B.C.'s forestry faculty has been studying the golden spruce intermittently for the last six years and is recognized as the foremost expert on it.

Finest Example

He says the Jusktla tree is the finest example of this particular type of mutation known in the world and represents a unique opportunity to study the genetics of trees, pollen distribution and the photo-oxidization process involved in its chlorophyll breakdown.

Sir Windham has his own theories about his find. He has long maintained that the golden spruce results from a genetic accident: "That tree must be to others of its species as an albino human is to other people — lack of pigment so colorless hair.."

Born in South Africa, Sir Windham was raised by other members of the Anstruther family in Britain after his parents died and entered the Royal Military College at Sandhurst late in the First World War.

However, the war had ended by the time he was ready to obtain a commission, and Sir Windham decided to chuck the military life to go adventuring in Canada, arriving in 1920 on his 20th birthday.

He rode the hard way across Canada, hopping freight trains with a pet German shepherd dog, and worked intermittently in the prairies prior to arriving in Vancouver in 1921.

Looking over his dwindling finances one evening over a glass of beer in a downtown Vancouver beer parlour, Sir Windham strayed into conversation with a man who turned out to be a civil engineer. When the engineer learned that the future Laird of Carmichael had studied trigonometry at Sandhurst, Ric Anstruther was hired on the spot and was on his way to a coastal surveying job in a matter of days.

In the years that followed he mapped substantial portions of the B.C. coast and Vancouver Island, but he always preferred the Queen Charlottes.

"It was beautiful country, hardly any inhabitants except the Haida Indians, and long silver beaches on the east coast," he recalled many years later.

Early in 1924 he moved into the Yakoun River country with a survey team, and a base camp was established 21 miles upstream from the Yakoun mouth.

"We towed our birchbark canoes in shallow water with salmon brushing against our legs. And I remember one salmon leaping into the canoe which already had four of us and supplies in it."

During his days off and after-work hours Sir Windham liked to ramble into the silent forest alone and "it was on one of these trips that I found the golden spruce. That tree is becoming a starlet, or at least one of the minor wonders of the world.

"I didn't even make an axe-mark on it, being, I suppose, a bit overcome by its strangeness in a forest of green."

The Haida Indians native to the Queen Charlottes were aware of the tree and it had been seen as early as 1885 by white explorers, who thought it was interesting but did nothing about it. Sir Windham was the first to recognize it as an important botanical rarity and bring it to the attention of scientists.

When the small cuttings he took reached the outside world a few months later the samples created a sensation among botanists and foresters. At first it was thought that Sir Windham had discovered an entirely new species of spruce. Then it was believed that the tree was suffering from some rare disease. Both ideas proved incorrect, and the question of what caused the golden hue is still unresolved.

At the time, the discovery had little impact on the life of Ric Anstruther and he continued to move from one surveying job to the next. Within four years, however, his entire life had changed.

Inherited Title

John F. Jacobsen, a Norwegian-born forester now retired and living in Vancouver, was Sir Windham's best friend and tentmate at Menzies Bay on Dec. 4, 1928, the day the young Scot learned he had inherited the title and estate.

"The telegram arrived and he turned pale with surprise," Jacobsen recalled.

Sir Windham and Jacobsen parted company for what both thought would be only a matter of a few weeks or months at most. It proved to be more than three decades before they got together again in Vancouver, over a huge loggers' breakfast of pancakes at a downtown hotel.

When Sir Windham arrived in Scotland, the estate teetered on the brink of financial collapse. Sir Windham was forced to sell off 5,000 acres immediately to cover steep succession duties and has since disposed of smaller parcels that have pared the estate down to 4,000 acres from the 13,000 he inherited.

Sir Windham's title was itself born out of financial desperation — the diminished royal purse of Charles I of England. To meet his Royal Army payroll, Charles created 150 new baronetcies covering Nova Scotia and Scotland and made these available to Scottish noblemen at 1,095 Pounds each.

Stumpage Rate Cuts Welcome

VANCOUVER (CP) — G. L. Draeseke, president of the Council of Forest Industries of British Columbia, said Friday he welcomes Resources Minister Bob Williams announced changes in stumpage rates.

Williams said B.C. interior forest operators, hit hard by a slump in the lumber market, will be charged only minimum stumpage on trees and independent coastal operators will have their levies cut in half.

The new rates are retroactive to Nov. 1 and continue until March 31, 1975.

"The only thing that can be done with B.C. is to moderate the costs of production," Draeseke said. "Mr. Williams' announcement contains steps in this direction and we welcome it."

He said, however, "charging different stumpage prices to different people for trees of equal value is a novel concept and should be approached cautiously."

Draeseke said the industry's major problem continues to be the world market situation.

T. G. Rust, president of Weyerhaeuser of Canada Ltd., said in Kamloops Friday that the reduction comes too late to help combat the situation caused by depressed lumber markets and the cutback in housing starts.

The reductions will encourage logging during the winter and maintain employment, he said, but the reductions will not help sawmills move their lumber.

Rust said the reduction of stumpage to $1.10 for a hundred cubic feet of wood harvested may enable some independent mills to continue operating at present price levels.

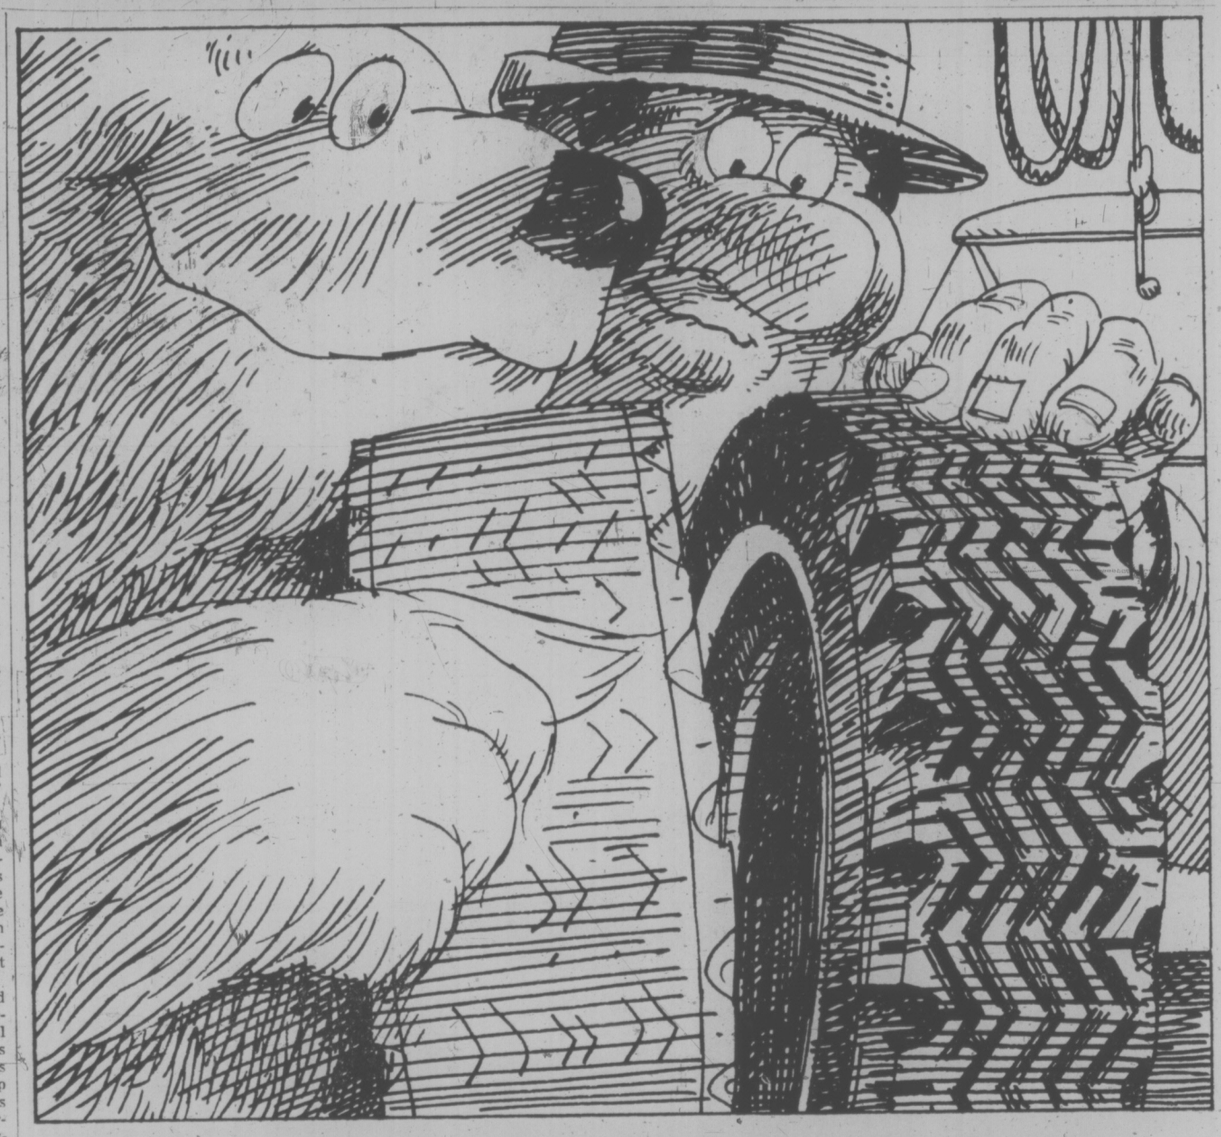
B.C. Forest Service officials have estimated that most of the interior operators were already paying the $1.10 rate before the announcement.

For coastal independent firms, the stumpage rate has been reduced to 10 per cent of log sale values in the Vancouver forest district and eight per cent of sales for the north coastal area.

Williams also announced a one-year moratorium on logging and road construction and other development in the wilderness core of the Bonaparte-Tranquille forest area and the Lac Du Bois area.

The moratorium will give the government and local groups adequate opportunity to study the roadless core area without adversely affecting existing or planned logging operations, he said.

Williams said the chairman of the provincial environment and land use committee has begun a study of the area.



BEFORE THE JUDGE

A 17-year-old was remanded to Dec. 13 for sentencing for seven offences, including four burglaries.

Leo Chaney Vose, 7795 East Saanich, pleaded guilty to breaking into the residence of John Byrne, 760 Haliburton, on two occasions, stealing a tool box, camera, wine, beer and money worth $207 Oct. 29 and taking eight beer bottles worth $2.40 Nov. 19.

He entered the home of Thomas MacDonald, 916 Haliburton, twice on Oct. 29 and stole a camera, radio and speaker, a clock and liquor, including two bottles of brandy regarded as collector's items. Total value of the stolen items was about $440.

The other offences concerned his possession of stolen tools worth $50, stealing a $15 radio from a car parked on Wesley and being in possession of cannabis resin.

A 68-year-old man with a criminal record dating back 15 years received a six-month jail sentence when he appeared in Victoria provincial court Friday afternoon.

Prosecutor Gordon Macdonald said Lindley was currently on bail on another theft charge laid Nov. 17. A trial date had been set in the matter for next March.

Macdonald also noted the accused had been charged with possession of stolen property last July 20 and added that charge had not been disposed of by the court yet either.

The prosecutor read parts of Lindley's record which included a number of theft charges in recent years.

"I could say the reason is I'm an alcoholic," the accused said. "But I don't like to use that as an excuse."

Judge Edmund St. Jorre remarked: "You've a long depressing record dating back to 1929 — the year the great Depression started . . . I sentence you to six months."

"You couldn't make that shorter could you?" Lindley responded.

"No," St. Jorre answered curtly.

UNITED WAY DRIVE 'BEST RETURN YET'

Proceeds of this year's United Way campaign are expected to be more than $685,000 by the time the final audit is done, Victoria campaign chairman Bob Ostler said today.

The contributions fall slightly short of the target of $698,000, but Ostler said this year's is the most successful campaign in the organization's 37 year history.

"We are pleased with the returns to date, especially in the residential division," Ostler said.

Campaign projections show more returns still to come from almost all campaign divisions.

There are still a number of businesses to be called on, Ostler said, "and I hope that they will be understanding and receptive when the canvasser does call."

Anyone who has not been canvassed and wants to contribute to the United Way can still mail in a donation to the office at 737 Fort Street, or phone 385-6708 and arrange for a canvasser to call.

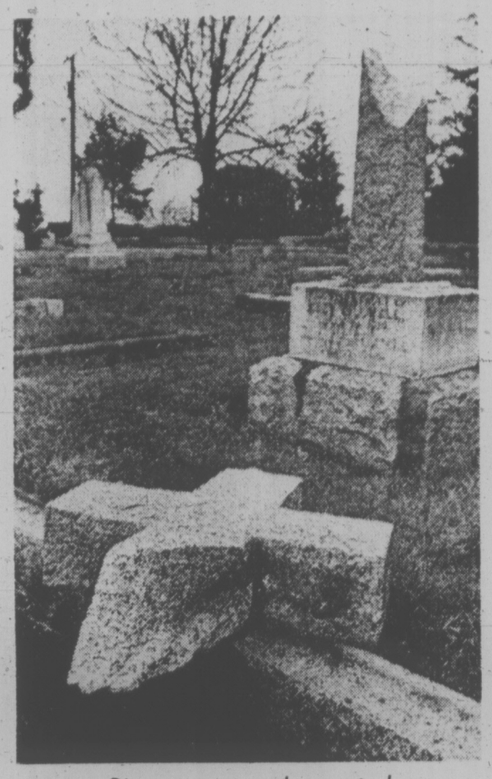
Victoria is now leading in the campaign challenge with Dartmouth, Nova Scotia, Ostler said.

"We have this opportunity to beat the east coast and I'd really like to see us do it," Ostler said.

He reminded participants in the Walkathon '74 project to turn in their pledge collections.

The United Way supports 23 agencies in the Greater Victoria area. Allotments range from nominal amounts to fledgling organizations to more than $90,000 for large, multi-service organizations like the Red Cross and the YM-YWCA. The George R. Pearkes Clinic for the Handicapped is another major recipient of funds.

Vandalism Strengthens Park Plea



Pioneer grave desecrated.

By PAUL MOSS
Times Staff

This is an elegy to a city cemetery, and a eulogy for the "illustrious" souls buried there.

Ross Bay cemetery, last resting place of statesmen, soldiers and other notable B.C. pioneers, is becoming a target for "violent vandalism," says the British Columbia Historical Association.

"Monuments have been smashed; columns have been knocked over; the capitals of some columns have been removed, and these results are the effect of considerable force and cannot be attributed to weather or the lapse of time," association president K. L. Leeming complains in a letter to Victoria city council.

He suggests measures to deter the vandals, including strong lighting "discreetly placed" in trees and shrubs, and possibly fencing the seaward boundary of the graveyard.

But city parks committee chairman Ald. Malcolm Anderson said Friday it would not be practical to implement such proposals. Fencing is generally abhorrent to city parks policies, he said, and cemetery lights would be subject to more abuse than the gravestones themselves.

Anderson said the aim is to encourage greater use of Ross Bay as a "cemetery-park," and this in itself might prove some deterrent to vandalism.

"I think we do more honor to our dead by creating a living park than fencing it in and putting on lights to keep out the ghouls," he added.

Ross Bay cemetery covers 27.5 acres and costs the city about $40,000 a year to maintain. Only about 40 burials a year now take place there, all of them on family plots bought years ago. There are no new plots available.

Within its grounds, says the association's letter, "lie the remains and stand the memorials to illustrious pioneers of this city and this province."

Says the BCHA: "The disgraceful, wanton misconduct of a few persons distresses and, to some extent, disgraces many. The place which should be honored, preserved and excellently maintained is sadly neglected."

But parks director Cliff Bate says in a report to Anderson's committee, which will consider the matter next week, that considering Ross Bay has more than 10,000 graves the incidence of vandalism is "relatively low."

Bate admits, however, that it does constitute a "continuing problem."

He, too, expresses doubts about the effectiveness of lights, fencing, gates and patrols, and agrees greater public interest in the cemetery might help curb wilful damage.

Bate suggests including $1,000 in the parks budget for 1975 to repair broken gravestones.

Anderson, whose own grandfather and great-grandfather are buried at Ross Bay, said gravestones belonging to families who can no longer be traced should be removed and installed flush in the turf to improve the cemetery's parklike atmosphere.

"It must be viewed as an asset to Victoria, as recreation land paying tribute to our forebears," he said.

Political Domination Forces Lifestyle Of Housing Projects

By PAT DUFOUR
Times Staff

B.C. citizens' control of their own lifestyle took another beating when the provincial government voted itself carte blanche control over what kind of housing it builds on government-owned lands.

The legislation introduced by the former Social Credit government, cancelled out by this government in 1973 and now reinstated, poses a threat to long-established neighborhoods where the government injects massive housing projects.

And, judging by this week's public hearing in Saanich on the controversial 305-unit Interurban-Marigold housing complex, the quality of life in government housing projects is not the top priority — nor are people.

It's statistics.

A. R. Rain of North Vancouver, vice-president of operations for the government's Dunhill Development Corporation Ltd., told this week's public hearing on the project that the formula used for the 30.6-acre site was 32 persons per acre.

He omitted to explain that because of the placing of the units, in one area at least, that density will rise to more than 60 persons per acre.

Family Life Out

As Terry Webb, supervisor for the provincial department of human resources in that area, pointed out, the lifestyle forced on the 1,500 adults and children expected to be housed in the profect would be "far from conducive to reasonable family life."

Nearby residents worry about the safety of their children — and those to be housed in the government project—once the 500 to 600 cars of the new residents and the many service trucks start using the narrow, ditch-lined access roads.

Their concern becomes suspect to the cynical, who see them only as home-owners anxious to hold on to their own way of life, protecting their investment.

But what of those who invest in Dunhill's condominium units?

The land on which the units stand will be leased on a 50-year basis from the government, costs of land acquisition and servicing being included in the lease cost.

A department of housing official spokesman said such housing projects are self-supporting, the tenants pay their way. But no price can buy rapport between those who live in such massive projects and their surrounding neighbours who feel threatened by the newcomers.

Use Not Issue

After this week's hearing, it must be clear to Saanich council that those neighbors are not against the government land being used for homes. To attack a chance for desperate people to buy a home in the current housing crisis is tantamount to making motherhood a crime.

It's yet to be decided by council as a whole, but individual aldermen have already indicated, off-the-record, they would like to see the government project cut down, perhaps halved.

To achieve this, however, it will be necessary for the provincial government to show the benevolence of a Big Brother.

The municipality has no legal whip with which to force the government to take another look at what it proposes to do to the community as a whole.

There is no big stick which council can use to get the government to develop a conscience about the way in which its Dunhill tenants will be forced to live.

Suggestion Killed

Parochialism and a "sticking-to-the-rules" attitude of the government agency has already killed a suggestion by Saanich that could have resulted in a more tolerant acceptance of the complex by the community.

Dunhill proposes to build a small recreation complex on the site, as required by Saanich, to be used, owned and operated by the condominium tenants.

It will not be open to the community, and even if it were it would be inadequate. Indeed, if it was used widely by the Dunhill tenants its facilities would be overtaxed.

Saanich proposed to Dunhill that, instead, it should earmark funds for a contribution to a larger recreation centre that would be housed on another site in the Colquitz that would be housed on another site in the Colquitz area and be large enough to meet the demands of the Dunhill residents and their neighbors.

Saanich's request was brushed aside.

Stalling by the provincial government pressure for higher density than the municipality wants, and insistence on development on its own terms, has bogged down Saanich's four-year-old Roy Road project.

Saanich's original concept was to assemble land and sell the lots at cost for single-family homes. The municipality was to be reimbursed by the senior governments in a tri-level agreement.

No Reply

Housing co-ordinator Gil Laurenson says the provincial government never replied to the application for the agreement, made about two years ago.

Laurenson said if the provincial government had co-operated at that time families would now be housed in the Royal Roads development area.

"They changed the name of the game on us," he said, "On the basis of proper planning, that area is right on the fringe of our urban area, single-family homes was right. We bought the land from the original owners at fantastically low prices on the understanding it would be for single-family homes only. Now the government is insisting on higher density. This puts us in an embarrassing situation."

Laurenson said the political hassle means that people locating there will now have to pay more.

"They're not cheap lots any more," he said. "They would have been about $4,000 at that time but servicing costs have been soaring."

The government's department of housing now wants to build clusters of townhouses, one at least of 29 units, scattered among the single-family units.

A Central Mortgage Housing Corporation said CMHC hoped to be able to provide financing for the units to co-operatives, contractors and homeowners.

Associate deputy minister George Chatterton met with council at an in-camera session Tuesday.

Mayor Ed Lum told the Times the provincial government insists development be carried out on the basis of 20 persons per acre while Saanich, because of limited sewer capacity, wants a 16.4 persons per acre ratio.

This would be 'a more realistic figure" Lum said.

He said Chatterton had had "indicated they will help us with the sewer" but, presumably, Sannich taxpayers will be expected to pick up the meeting.

Others Upset

The question of increasing the sewer capacity will be debated at Monday's council

Saanich is not the only municipality facing housing hassles with the provincial government. The mayors of Delta and Surrey on the mainland have also spoken out against the political domination.

The provincial government claims 10,000 housing units in the plannig but records show less than 300 units have been completed in the province.

Stalling and such statistics are cold comfort for the families who live in limbo, waiting for election promises to be fulfilled.

Bus Driver Attacked

By DEREK SIDENIUS
Times Staff

A burly bus driver beat off a knife-wielding attacker Friday night but lost $105 cash he had in his wallet — nonetheless.

Tom McKenzie, 28, a B.C. Hydro bus driver, said he had just stopped at a terminus at Oswego and Niagara in James Bay at 8:20 p.m. when a youth got on, took a seat behind him and said in a soft voice "wait a second, I've got to get my change."

There was no one else on board the bus at the time.

The next thing McKenzie knew the youth grabbed him by the jacket and put a knife against his neck.

McKenzie gave him $105 he had in his wallet — money he had just taken out of the bank to pay for his mortgage on Monday.

McKenzie refused. "No way, you can get off, but not me."

He said he stood up, turned to meet the youth and a scuffle ensued.

"He looked absolutely petrified. When I grabbed him there was a look of extreme terror on his face."

He said the youth's knife slashed his jacket, more by accident than intent to wound. A stack of timetable cards he had in his pocket prevented the four inch blade from cutting him.

The two fought inside the bus and McKenzie tripped and fell down the stairwell, his head striking the sidewalk, his attacker sprawled on top of him.

He said the knock momentarily stunned him and the youth managed to free himself and run off, the knife in one hand, the money in the other.

Victoria police issued this description of the youth: age between 19 and 20, black, wavy shoulder length hair, black moustache and part beard, 5'10" tall, 150 lbs., wearing an old navy type ankle length blue coat.

McKenzie received a minor back injury and will be off work for the next few days.

Old Town Plan Poses Dilemma

Developer Hans Hartwig has presented Victoria city council with something of a dilemma in his latest project proposal for which he needs rezoning approval.

The city favors his plan to restore an aged building in the Old Town area, at 546 Yates, but is worried that its proposed use as a liquor store will generate traffic and parking problems.

As Ald. Mike Young noted at Thursday's council meeting, the Application comes at a time when the city is trying to discourage vehicular traffic in that part of the city.

Although the Advisory Planning Commission had recommended approval, council tabled the matter for further study.

In other business, council cleared the way for a public hearing on the proposed Wilderness Park co-operative housing project, on a three-acre site at Summit and Jackson.

The 38-unit scheme, recommended for rezoning by the APC, would provide 15 three-bedroom, 14 two-bedroom and nine one-bedroom units—a total density of 13 to the acre.

School Contracts Under the Wire

Agreements were reached late Friday in Greater Victoria, Saanich, Sooke, Gulf Islands, Lake Cowichan and Cowichan districts.

The six were part of a record number of settlements reached throughout B.C. by the midnight Friday deadline set by Education Minister Eileen Dailly.

A total of 63 of the province's 74 districts settled before the deadline. The rest, including Vancouver, must go to arbitration.

However, a spokesman for the B.C. Teachers' Federation said he expected negotiations to continue in some of the districts over the weekend in an attempt to achieve voluntary settlements, despite expiry of the bargaining deadline.

Exact contract details were not released for the southern Vancouver Island zone but G. R. Kirby of the B.C. Teachers' Federation said salary increases are just over 16 per cent.

Details of the settlements will be released next week after both teachers and school trustees ratify the agreements.

Government legislation Nov. 7 broke an impasse between teachers and trustees over the move by 68 school boards to introduce province-wide bargaining this year. Teachers insisted on retaining local bargaining, and a compromise was reached of zonal bargaining. The province was divided in 17 zones for purposes of contact negotiations.

Claude, and his creator Barry Caviness of Victoria, are grateful to the scores of people who took the time to write or phone their support of his continuing appearance in the paper.

The letters and phone calls were four to one in Claude's favor.

We hope Times readers will be seeing him again as soon as his comic strip syndication is confirmed.

Auction A First For B.C.

An auction of oriental furnishings at the Empress Hotel Wednesday will be the first opportunity for collectors of objects d'art in B.C.—and possibly in Canada—to purchase from a wide variety of items originating in the People's Republic of China.

Hugh Lyle, of Maynard's Auctioneers Ltd., said Friday the hundreds of items in the consignment have been stored for years, and released for sale by auction "after lengthy and complex negotiations."

"The buyer has been working on contacts for years. I can't say too much about him, but he has made many trips over to China," Lyle said.

Said Lyle: "There are some pieces you just won't see the likes of."

Also to be auctioned Wednesday there will be two separate sessions starting at 1:30 and 7:30 p.m. is a private collection of oriental pieces, some going back to the Sung Dynasty (960-1279). Included are fine Japanese lacquered items and ivory netsuke.

Lyle said in all there will be 518 lots with more than 1,000 pieces in the auction of oriental art. Total value of the collection is close to $250,000, he said.

First session in Maynard's Christmas auction, starting Monday at 7:30 p.m., will feature early Canadian pine furniture, lamps, silver and plated items, paintings by Canadian artists, rugs, pressed glass, crystal and china.

The second session, 7:30 p.m. Tuesday, will offer Georgian and Victorian furniture, fine silver by makers such as Paul Storr, William Eaton and Hester Bateman, Belgian crystal, china, and paintings by European and English painters.

A preview of all items in the four sessions will be held Sunday from 7:30 to 9:30 p.m., and Monday from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m.

But Even Progress Has Its Price Tag

WE WERE SLOSHING along the home beach in rubber boots and rain suits this morning when my partner on the daily prowl came up with an observation.

well-populated strip of Up- who could say what the tide

"I'm wondering if we should paint the walls," she said, stepping over a windrow of kelp laced with a tangle of salmon line, "or go ahead with that wallpaper we were looking at."

"You mean the one with the stripes?" I asked. A length of almost-new cedar four-by-four was bobbing at the tide's edge, but we passed it with scarce a glance.

"No," Win said. "It's nice, but it wouldn't go with the new curtains."

"That reminds me," I told her. "The carpenter may turn up early. We'd better head back."

We reversed course, ignoring a moon-snail shell with only a couple of chips out of its rim, and hurried back to the house.

Where the beach merges with the foreshore tangle of gale-deposited drift and autumn-withered wild pea vines, my dear one paused. We eyed the plain-jane abode which has sheltered us for two years plus.

"You know," Win said, "I hate our old curtains. They're nothing but a bundle of rags. Only when we get the new ones up, there won't be a split we can reach through to open the window."

"Or to look at the weather," I said.

It occurred to me as we shed our boots on the back steps that we were going to miss that handy, yard-long tear in those curtains.

"I guess it's the price of progress," Win said. Her voice sounded the least bit bleak.

I knew what she meant. There's no gain without its loss, and even the modest refurbishing we had embarked on would leave its mark on our way of life.

We did not come to this well-populated strip of Up-Island shoreline as pioneers. But we did have our own pioneering phase, and it was a lot of fun.

As a couple re-committed to a freelance existence after 10 years in other pastures, we operated on a budget so tiny that the least unscheduled expense could and frequently did leave us counting pennies.

I fished for the pot. We dug clams and gathered oysters, picked berries and learned that young nettle leaves make better greens than spinach.

Win baked her own bread. We achieved a garden of sorts, and rejoiced in the scrooty vegetables that struggled for a roothold among its rocks.

Each day was an adventure in making-do, and what we couldn't afford, we added to our someday list.

Someday we would do something about those ratty old curtains. Meanwhile, there lay the beach — and who could say what the tide might have delivered to our doorstep?

In those days, we wouldn't have been so absorbed in home improvement as to pass up a useful chunk of four-by-four or a strand of line that might lead to a fishing lure snagged in a kelp stem.

Each morning, no matter what the weather, we prefaced the day's work with a spell of beachcombing. We scavenged like seagulls, and the sea was kind to us.

It sent us lengths of end-frayed rope in various colors and thicknesses. Most of the salmon plugs in our tackle boxes are gifts of the salt-chuck. The hard hat riding a wave crest like a little orange boat cost me no more than a boot full of water. The daily grab-bag might yield an abalone shell or a net sack of perfectly sound cooking onions. When Win needed a plank for a shelf, the next tide came through with one pre-shaped to her exact requirements.

We weren't living off the land. Even the sure-enough pioneers of long ago couldn't quite accomplish that. Still, we acquired a fine feeling of self-sufficiency.

By degrees our situation changed. We made a buck here and another there. This shift in our fortunes was by no means spectacular. But if the eagle didn't scream, at least its occasional croak took on a healthier note.

Then one day as I was poling my head through the split in the dining-room curtain to check on the weather, Win, our business manager, made a pronouncement.

"I think we can do something about this room at last," she said.

Since then, life has posed one problem after another. Green curtains or gold? Dry-wall or panelling? Wall-to-wall carpet or an area rug?

So to this morning, when we tramped a quarter-mile of beach with hardly a thought for wind and weather, sky and sea.

The realization jolted me.

"The dining room fix-up will leave us pretty broke," I said. The thought brought no dismay.

"We can always eat clam chowder," Win said cheerfully. She pulled on her beach boots. "I thought I'd just go see what's on the end of that salmon line."

The four-by-four was gone, reclaimed by the tide. But we found a $5 salmon plug in the kelp bundle, not a scratch on it, and the hooks barely rusted.

Johann Sebastian Bear Gets Survival Boost

By AUDREY JOHNSON
Times Staff

Some bears have to get along with just what nature provides when they're out in the wilderness.

But not Johann Sebastian Bear, who has been thoroughly equipped by Victoria Conservatory of Music women's committee to enjoy life in an Alpine meadow.

He has a warm sleeping bag to curl up in, a tent to shelter him from the dews and the rain, a flashlight in case things get a bit scarey out there.

He doesn't even have to raid anybody's picnic site; he has his own picnic basket complete with real honey and bread.

J. S. Bear's plush hide is clad in a natty alpiner's suit and his shoebutton eyes peer out from under a hat that would look classy on a Swiss yodeller.

With all his paraphernalia, Johann Sebastian will be the central attraction at the Christmas bazaar in aid of scholarship funds, to be held at Craigdarroch Castle, Saturday, Dec. 7.

He is to be raffled and hopes to end up beside some child's Christmas tree. Wednesday and Thursday he will be on display in Eaton's music department. The needlework in the project, from bear to tent, is by Mrs. Charlton W. Bullock, Foul Bay Road.

In addition to the raffle of Johann Sebastian, the bazaar will offer home baking and preserves, candy, Christmas decorations, fine used toys, charming aprons and a whole raft of gift possibilities at a variety stall.

As well as scholarships, proceeds from the affair will be used to purchase special musical equipment and for other projects.

The Bazaar will open in the castle at 1 p.m.

Ready For Combat

FORT CAMPBELL, Ky. (AP) — The law prohibits women from drawing combat assignments in the United States armed forces, but if the law is changed, Penny Hartley will be ready.

This week Miss Hartley, an army private, became the first woman to complete the 101st Airborne Division's rugged air-assault course.

Miss Hartley had to hike five miles on a forced march in two hours, run two miles in 16½ minutes, pass a written examination, do 37 situps and 33 pushups in one minute, climb a troop ladder into an airborne helicopter, and rappell off a 40-foot tower.

Lib Pioneer Still Going Strong

Marion Royce! Do you know that name? Those interested in women's rights as far back as the 50s will surely recognize it.

She was the first director of the federal Women's Bureau in Ottawa and she remained in that position for 12 years until her retirement from public service in 1967.

In that time she was known and recognized from coast-to-coast. Since retirement there has been little or nothing about her in the news.

That doesn't mean Marion Royce is tucked away somewhere in an Ottawa apartment, living out her days in seclusion.

No indeed! At 73, this remarkable woman is still active — working one-fifth time as a research associate at the Ontario Institute for Studies in Education.

In it there is an announcement that the bureau celebrated a 20th anniversary in September.

With that announcement there appears an article about Marion Royce "in recognition of her invaluable contribution to the Women's Bureau during her tenure as director for more than half its existence."

Regarding that one-fifth time work she is doing at the moment, the article says "she is being paid for one-fifth time, although her hours on the job are considerably more."

Then it explains she is working on a project of historial documentation of women and education in Ontario.

When she came to the bureau, Marion Royce already had an enviable background. She had been principal of a private girls' school in Toronto, and before that had worked in 20 countries for the World YWCA.

She had taken part in the United Nations Commission on the Status of Women and participated in activities sponsored by the International Labor Organization.

The staff of the bureau was small, and it remained small throughout Miss Royce's tenure.

Nevertheless, it wasn't long until in collaboration with the economics and research branch, it had embarked upon a first research project — a survey of married women in employment.

During the next dozen or so years, the Women's Bureau continued to publish studies covering a range of topics, including vocational training, maternity leave, continuing education, day-care services and career opportunities.

During the Royce term main focus of the work reflected the changing situation of women workers.

"Initial concern was centred on the great influx of married women into the labor force but later issues, such as part-time employment, which was not a common practice during the early years of the bureau, began to require attention."

In one of the first speeches given by the new director, she expressed exactly what she thought about equal pay for equal work: that it was sheer justice.

At that time there was no equal pay legislation at the federal level.

Maternity leave and benefits were also great concerns. Maternity leave had been recognized by the International Labor Organization as early as 1919 but only one province in Canada, British Columbia, had maternity leave legislation at the time the bureau was established.

Today, Marion Royce still transmits her concern for social justice, not only for women, but for all individuals. She has never lost her interest in the situation of women at work, nor her concern for women and girls who are still going into traditional female occupations.

In this connection the Women at Work article quotes her as saying, "This is one problem that we just can't give up on. I don't think people should be pushed into one thing or another but the economic emancipation of women is really most important.

"There is also a kind of freedom that goes beyond economic emancipation and what I wish most for women more than anything else is that we can move out of our narrow outlook and face other issues, give leadership in other areas.

"This kind of emancipation will happen when women feel more secure as individuals. Then they can go beyond themselves."

The article concludes with "Marion Royce, through her leadership, not only at the Women's Bureau, but in her many other jobs, is a fine example of what that kind of emancipation can do."

That was fully recognized in 1971 when this outstanding Canadian woman was awarded the Order of Canada Medal of Service.

In part, the citation read: "For her services in the fields of education and labor, particularly as they relate to women."

BEST BUY
$37,000

In 4½ years of handling all kinds of condominiums, this is one of the best values I've seen for the money. In comfortable living, in sound construction, in convenient location, in amenities (dandy whirlpool, undergrround parking) and with an attractive southwesterly outlook to boot. Call me anytime or see me on Wednesday at The Talisman.
